SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, once again we offer unto Thee our grateful thanks for Thy mercy that cared for us during the night and brought us safely to this hour.

Today is the tomorrow we worried about yesterday, and we see how foolish our anxiety was.

Teach us to trust Thee more completely and to seek Thy help in all that we have to do, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 17, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting a nomination was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair desires to make an announcement. Under the rules of the Senate speeches can be made during the consideration of the morning business only by unanimous consent. The Chair hopes Senators will remember the rule and adhere to it.

RESIGNATION BY SENATOR BARKLEY AS A SENATOR OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of a letter written by me to the Governor of Kentucky, which I ask that the clerk may read for the information of the Senate and for the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

JANUARY 7, 1949.

Hon. EARLE C. CLEMENTS,
Governor of Kentucky,
Frankfort, Ky.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: In view of my election as Vice President of the United States for the term beginning January 20, 1949, I hereby tender my resignation as Senator of the United States from the Commonwealth of Kentucky, to take effect at midnight on January 19, 1949.

Very sincerely yours,

ALBEN W. BARKLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF ROBERT E. LEE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, to those of us who live in Lexington, Va., January 19 is an important anniversary. It is the birthday of that great, stalwart educator, civic leader, and Christian gentleman, Robert E. Lee.

In commemoration of the one hundred and forty-second anniversary of the birthday of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the District of Columbia Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy will hold a memorial service at the statue of General Lee in Statuary Hall tomorrow forenoon, January 19, at 11 o'clock. Mrs. Ferguson Cary, of Alexandria, Va., the national historian general, will make the presentation of the wreath in behalf of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Other wreaths will be presented by the Virginia State Society and the Sons of Confederate Veterans. Miss Liza Ellen Carpenter, president of the District of Columbia Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, will preside.

All Members of the Senate are invited to be present. There will be no speeches.

RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION RELATING TO TERM OF OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

Mr. LANGER presented a concurrent resolution of the legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota pertaining to the ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution A

Ratification proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President

Whereas the Eightieth Congress of the United States of America, at the first session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Friday the 3d day of January 1947, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made and passed a proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, which joint resolution was duly ratified by Congress and approved by the President of the United States, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SEC. 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than 2 years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress": Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the said foregoing proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is, hereby ratified by the legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be forwarded by the Governor of this State to the Secretary of State for the United States of America at Washington, D. C., and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the National Congress.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL WAGE FOR WORKERS IN INDUSTRIES HAVING GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], I send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill providing for a guaranteed annual wage for all workers in industries having Government contracts.

This bill would amend the Walsh-Healey Act so as to add the provision that in any contract made by the Federal Government for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, and equipment in any amount exceeding $10,000 there be included a stipulation that the employee be employed on an annual basis.

The bill (S. 546) to require certain contractors with the Government to guarantee an annual wage for their employees, introduced by Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. MCMAHON), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a statement descriptive of this proposal.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LODGE

We commonly speak of hours, wages, and working conditions as summing up the factors on which the well-being of the everyday citizen depends; and indeed it is true that if these are not right, our life cannot be right.

But hours, wages, and working conditions, while they take care of our day-to-day existence, do not take into account that need for security which is felt by all of us as we travel on life's uncertain voyage. No matter how adequate our hours, wages, and working conditions may be, we cannot be happy or successful or productive if we are constantly haunted by the worry as to where we'll be or how we'll be living by the end of the year.

Man wants to make his plans by the year. The education of children, the acquiring of a real home, the planning of recreation and vacation—all the things which give life meaning and make for permanence and dependability involve the ability to plan by the year.

In order to meet this need for security, government has developed old-age payments and unemployment insurance. For Federal workers there are pensions, retirement plans, and other security measures. Meritorious legislation to provide aid for medical purposes and for housing are proposed. These plans all fill real needs and are all right as far as they go. But it is assuredly far better to earn the money which comes from full employment rather than to look forward either to some slender pittance because regular employment has ceased or to depend on Government aid for services which, in our free society, could come from regular employment.

The real way to meet this need for security is for all industries which are able to do so to say to their employees: "We know that we want to hire you by the year. Therefore we are going to guarantee you your wages for a year. You can count on it." The employee who receives this assurance then knows where he stands. He can plan his life and that of his family; he can make commitments for the education of his children, for necessary dental or medical work, for payments on his house, and for the other things which raise his standard of living. Unless he receives a guarantee that his wages would be paid for a year he cannot make these commitments. Even though he might by the end of the year have earned as much money, the fact that he had had no assurance of it would have required him to live virtually a hand-to-mouth existence.

There are already companies in the United States which have followed this guaranteed wage policy with wonderful results. But it is not a policy which most firms can adopt without some sort of legal encouragement, because one firm cannot afford such a policy if his competitor refuses to do it also.

In order to give encouragement to industries to pay wages on a guaranteed annual basis we are introducing a bill which amends the so-called Walsh-Healey Act so as to provide that in any contract made by the Federal Government for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, etc., in any amount over $10,000 there be included a stipulation by the contractor that his employees be employed on an annual basis.

The Walsh-Healey Act already contains provisions for minimum wages, a 40-hour week, 8-hour day, safe and sanitary working conditions, and a ban on child or convict labor. To these stipulations our bill would add the guaranteed annual wage.

The bill consists of two parts. The first part, containing the heart of the bill, is modeled on language used in the Federal Social Security Act which has stood the test of more than 13 years' experience. The second part is based on existing provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, and, for the sake of necessary flexibility, authorizes the President to make modifications so as to enable the Government under all conditions to receive the services which it might need. The bill also contains a provision for revision of the wage guaranties when this becomes necessary, due to increases in the cost of living.

This idea of a guaranteed annual wage is not only referred to and defined in two existing statutes—the Federal Social Security Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act; it is also endorsed by the leaders of our great labor organizations.

The sponsorship of this measure is bipartisan. If enacted into law, it will provide guaranteed annual wages for all who work for firms having Government contracts—surely a very large number of persons. It should set an example for other industries to follow and thus spread the guaranteed wage to all parts of the country. Due to the world situation, our Government is embarked on an immense purchasing program; surely none will deny it the right to prescribe conditions for conducting this program which will promote better living and better citizenship. By avoiding the costs which unemployment and insecurity cause, this scheme will save money. It will certainly involve no cost to the taxpayer. In fact, the cost will not be in dollars; but in headwork and good planning.

This annual wage bill should also have many far-reaching results which it is now difficult to estimate. The greater sense of security which all these families will possess will lead to better living, better education, better medical care, and better community life generally. This will have incalculable effects on the buying power, economic habits, and labor relations of the beneficiaries of this scheme.

This bill is in essence an attempt to induce our free system to yield all the benefits which it is capable of yielding. If the free system does not do all the good of which it is capable, increased governmental services are inevitable. In fact, this bill may well mark a parting of the ways: either we make the most of our present system and develop all its latent strength—or we can expect a succession of policies which will progressively sap its vigor and thus eventually make lower living standards for everyone.

Finally, this proposal will also have a real effect on the faith and enthusiasm which people have in the soundness of our country's institutions. The more completely people share in the blessings and benefits of our way of life the more they believe in it. The more people believe in our way of life, the richer and more productive it becomes. The measure which we propose should still further make of the United States a land where freemen can grow and flourish in ever-increasing numbers.

TEXT OF SECTION 1 OF THE WALSH-HEALEY ACT, FOLLOWED BY NEW SUBSECTION AS PROPOSED IN THE LODGE-M'MAHON AMENDMENT

(1) In any contract made and entered into by any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency or instrumentality of the United States, or by the District of Columbia, or by any corporation all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States (all the foregoing being hereinafter designated as agencies of the United States) for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles, and equipment in any amount exceeding $10,000, there shall be included the following representations and stipulations:

"(f) That the contractor has guaranteed in advance 30 hours of wages for each 40 calendar weeks (or more, with 1 weekly hour deducted for each added week guaranteed) in 12 months, to all the individuals in his employ in one or more distinct establishments, except that any such individual's guaranty may commence after a probationary period (included within 12 or less consecutive calendar weeks); in the event, however, that the cost-of-living index as established by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, known as the Consumer's Price Index, should, at any time during the term of such guaranty, show a rise of 10 or more points by comparison with the index on the date upon which such guaranty became effective, appropriate modification of such guaranty may be made between the contractor and his employees: Provided, That whenever in his judgment inclusion in the proposal or contract of the representations or stipulations set forth in this subsection will seriously impair the conduct of Government business and will not serve the public interest, the President is authorized to modify or suspend any or all of the representations and stipulations contained in this subsection."

CONTINUATION OF LAW RELATING TO VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS AND PLANS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. MAYBANK was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAYBANK OF PURPOSE AND NEED FOR PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO CONTINUE THROUGH SEPTEMBER 30, 1949, CERTAIN AUTHORITY CONFERRED ON THE PRESIDENT BY SECTION 2 OF PUBLIC LAW 395, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, REGARDING VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS AND PLANS

The purpose of the proposed legislation is the temporary extension, to September 30, 1949, of the authority of the President to approve voluntary agreements and plans under section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress (act of December 30, 1947; 61 Stat. 945). The present authority terminates on March 1, 1949, subject to a 6-month wind-up period of limited effectiveness for agreements then in effect. The proposed temporary extension through September 30, 1949 (with no wind-up period thereafter) will make it possible to keep the program going pending congressional consideration of more comprehensive stabilization proposals.

On the basis of its experience in carrying out the administration of the act, the Department of Commerce is of the opinion that the program has been successful, within the limitations inherent in any voluntary program, in overcoming some of the problems arising from shortages of goods and facilities. In so doing the program has contributed on a voluntary basis to meeting certain essential requirements of our domestic economy as a whole, and also to meeting the steel requirements of the armed forces and the Atomic Energy Commission, these military requirements being also covered by the mandatory-order provision of section 18 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (Public Law 759, 80th Cong.).

An immediate interim extension of the present authority through September 30, 1949, is necessary in order to preserve the full benefits of the voluntary agreements in effect on March 1, 1949, and to permit entering into such new agreements as might provide substantial benefits before September 30, 1949, pending consideration of a general stabilization program. While these voluntary agreements in effect on March 1 could continue to provide limited benefits after that date, their full effectiveness and the realization of any benefits whatever from new agreements would be lost if the continuity of the program were interrupted or stopped.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY FOR REGULATION OF EXPORTS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 548) to provide for continuation of authority for the regulation of exports, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. MAYBANK is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAYBANK OF PURPOSE AND NEED FOR PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FOR CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY FOR THE REGULATION OF EXPORTS, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The proposed bill would provide for continuance of existing export-control powers through June 30, 1951, subject to termination at an earlier date by the President or the Congress. The present law authorizing control over exports, section 3 of Public Law 395 of the Eightieth Congress, expires February 28, 1949.

Through export controls the Department of Commerce is able to limit the quantity of shipments abroad and thus lessen the inflationary impact of foreign demand. Of even greater importance at the present time are the measures which are being taken thereunder to channel critically needed commodities to those areas where they will be used to promote world recovery and also to control certain exports in the interest of national security. The extension of this law is clearly necessary and should be authorized as soon as possible for reasons of administrative continuity and so that there may be adequate notice to the trade community of the continuance of these controls.

Section 1 of the proposed bill would provide the factual justification for extending these powers and section 2 sets forth the policies which shall govern their exercise.

Under existing law the authority to issue purely enforcement regulations is implied from the general authority granted to issue all necessary rules and regulations. However, in the light of recent developments indicating the need for a broader and stronger enforcement program, it is considered desirable to obtain specific authority for undertaking all necessary enforcement measures. Such authority would be established by section 3. For the same reason provision is made in section 6 for necessary investigatory powers.

Section 4 (a) would provide for interdepartmental consultation as to specific items to be controlled and the extent of the control. Section 4 (b) would provide for consultation with representatives of the export trade concerning licensing criteria and related matters. Under existing law, consultation on this matter is entirely discretionary. These provisions describe and would require the continuation of current operating policies and at the same time permit the administrative flexibility which experience of several years has demonstrated to be essential.

Section 5 would continue existing penalties for violations except that the maximum prison penalty has been reduced from 2 years to 1, in order to permit the institution of prosecution by way of information rather than formal indictment and to that extent enable prosecution of violators of the law to be expedited. Moreover, in the few criminal cases that have thus far been prosecuted under the Export Control Act, penalties of much less than 1 year have been imposed.

In accordance with the policy for temporary legislation set forth in section 2 of the Administrative Procedure Act, section 7 would provide an exemption from all provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act except the public information requirement of section 3 of that act. Section 8 would continue the present reporting requirement, except that it provides for the submission of reports within 45 rather than within 30 days after each quarter for administrative convenience and so that the reports may contain more current information and statistical data.

Section 10 would provide that the export licensing of tin-plate scrap, now controlled by the Department of State, would be handled under this act. No changes are proposed, however, in the existing special arrangements with respect to the control of exports of helium, gold, munitions of war, or atomic energy materials.

Section 12 would establish June 30, 1951, as the termination date for this control activity. This section also provides expressly for earlier termination by the President or the Congress. Exercise of control over the exportation of specific articles, materials, or supplies would, of course, be adjusted by the procedure set out in section 4 (a) and in accordance with policy delcared in section 2.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Social Security Act, as amended. It is identical with Senate bill 1403 of the Eightieth Congress.

The purpose of the bill is to double the present limitation on outside earnings of widows receiving social-security payments without depriving them of their survivor's insurance or the aid which they get for dependent children. At present the limitation is $14.99 per month on these outside earnings, and my proposal, in line with suggestions to me from the Social Security Board, would double this limitation to $30. This is obviously not a large sum to permit these folks to earn on their own initiative; it is clear, however, that the sum cannot be made too large so that, as the Social Security Board states, it would become unnecessary to give the individuals survivor's aid. The Board, therefore, recommended either $25 or $30 as a limitation, and I have, therefore, used the latter figure.

I am hoping for early action on this bill by the Senate Finance Committee and upon legislation in the entire field of social security.

The bill (S. 565) to amend the Social Security Act, as amended, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS IN AMERICAN SHIPS UNDER THE ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress the Senate placed an amendment in the measure providing for the economic recovery program which provided that 50 percent of the goods, in bulk or otherwise, to be shipped to Europe under the program, be transported in American bottoms, the American merchant marine. The Director of the Economic Recovery Program, Mr. Paul Hoffman, announced approximately a month ago that the language in which the Senate and House made this mandatory was somewhat ambiguous, and that his directive on the matter should, therefore, be reviewed by his legal department, which was done. In line with that Mr. Hoffman announced that probably his organization would not have to follow that formula.

Several of us are very much interested in this matter, because of our interest in the future of the American merchant marine and the part it might play in economic recovery and world trade. We had a meeting this morning with Mr. Hoffman, attended by representatives of all the principal shipping interests, by representatives of the labor groups involved, and by representatives of both the House and the Senate. It was agreed to postpone the order until the Congress could make a determination as to just what it desired in regard to participation by the American merchant marine in our economic recovery program for Europe.

In order to make that clear, the chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. BLAND, of Virginia, has introduced a measure in the House, and I now introduce a similar bill, making clear the congressional intent in this matter.

The bill (S. 591) to provide for United States flag shipping participation in Government-financed cargoes, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON (for himself and Mr. O'CONOR), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by me regarding the purpose of the bill, together with three editorials.

There being no objection, the statement and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON; INTRODUCTION OF MERCHANT MARINE POLICY BILL

On behalf of myself and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] I am today sending a bill to the desk for appropriate reference which, if enacted, will establish a national policy with reference to transportation of cargoes financed by American funds—whether they be grants-in-aid, direct loans, or credits for the procurement of commodities in this country by other nations. The bill proposes that American-flag ships shall carry at least 50 percent of all Government-financed cargoes.

This provision applies to all Government agencies and departments. The only exception to this basic principle would occur when and if the United States Maritime Commission certifies to the agency or department concerned that United States flag ships are not available in sufficient number to do the job.

Most Members of this Senate, I am sure, realize the serious situation currently confronted by the United States merchant marine. In the last 17 months over 1,200 United States ships have gone into the inactive fleet. In truth, the American flag is rapidly disappearing from the seas. All of us know the vital role the merchant marine and the shore installations necessary to maintain it, played during World War II. In my judgment, it is absolutely essential to national security and to our national economy that the Congress promote maritime policies aimed at maintaining a minimum but adequate fleet of merchant vessels flying the American flag.

One step in this direction is to establish a national policy governing shipments of United States financed cargoes—a policy such as I am proposing in this bill.

For over 2 weeks in March of last year, the Senate debated problems in connection with the so-called Marshall plan. One of the items of deep concern to all of us was the proposal contained in the original draft for sale and charter of American ships to foreign nations. The senior Senators of Maine, Connecticut, Michigan, and Kentucky, and the junior Senator from California were among those instrumental in deleting this provision in the final draft of the bill. These Senators and others joined with me in insisting also that a provision be written into the act requiring the Administrator to move at least 50 percent of the commodities purchased in the United States for participating countries in American bottoms.

An amendment submitted by the junior Senator from California became section 111 (a) (2) of the act. That section reads:

"The Administrator shall, in providing for the procurement of commodities under authority of this title, take such steps as may be necessary to assure, so far as is practicable, that at least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of commodities, procured within the United States out of funds made available under this title and transported abroad on ocean vessels, is so transported on United States flag vessels to the extent such vessels are available at market rates."

All of us vitally interested in the problem thought this language and its legislative history sufficiently strong to clearly indicate to the Administrator congressional intent on the subject.

On December 1, 1948, however, the Administrator announced that after December 31, 1948, ECA would no longer consider itself bound by the 50 percent provision. Subsequently, the effective date of the Administrator's decision was deferred to January 31, 1949. I and other Senators have protested to the Administrator this change of policy.

I believe the Congress can avoid such difficulties in the future by establishing a national policy along the lines I am suggesting in the bill. Had such a policy existed at the time ECA legislation was under consideration, the executive departments would have tailored their recommendations in the light of principles clearly set forth by the Congress.

Within the next few days, I will propose to the Senate that a full-dress study of maritime problems be inaugurated by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. The bill I am introducing today is one facet of that study. I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Seafarers Log, from the Marine Digest, and from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer be incorporated as a part of my remarks.

[From the Seafarers Log of January 7, 1949]

"THE FACTS, MR. HOFFMAN

"In a letter to Senator STYLES BRIDGES, former chairman of the congressional watchdog committee on the Marshall plan, ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman tried to justify his infamous proposal to move all bulk Marshall plan cargoes in foreign vessels by a statement that simply does not fit the facts.

"He declared that the cost of shipping a ton of coal from the United States to France is sometimes as much as $4.50 less on a foreign ship than on an American ship. He strongly implies that this big differential was the rule rather than the exception, and he forgot to note that it was an exception that was no longer happening on December 3 when he wrote the letter.

"The facts are these: The American rate for carrying coal from the east coast to France is $10.85 a ton. This rate is set by the Maritime Commission. On foreign ships the rate ranges from $8.50 a ton to about $9. This week, in an effort to get at the truth, a shipping official called three operators of foreign-flag vessels to inquire about the coal rate. Two of the operators quoted $8.50. The third wouldn't talk about any rate below $9 and seemed to prefer a higher one.

"Thus, the actual differential about which Hoffman has been bleating turns out to be no more than $2.35 a ton at the most and only $1.85 or less in some cases. And the story doesn't end there, because the differential is just about wiped out later so far as American taxpayers are concerned. Coal is not the only bulk cargo, but the coal rate continues to be the root of the controversy.

"Another facet of the Marshall plan shipping situation has been overlooked completely by Hoffman and his executive assistants. At least, they have not mentioned it in their public statements. Whether Hoffman knows it or not, foreign operators are getting away with a scheme so obvious that one can only conclude that Hoffman is a very gullible gent.

"It is no secret that representatives of French shipping interests recently told a member of the Maritime Commission that they deliberately depressed their rates in a maneuver to get a bigger slice of the melon. Later on, the Frenchmen continued, up would go the rates. The Americans would be hoodwinked.

"Shipping men of other nations participating in the Marshall plan are reported to have said substantially the same thing, although they said it less bluntly than the Frenchmen. Foreign rates already are rising as the foreign operators smack their lips in anticipation.

"Foreign operators haven't been worrying about making or losing money for the present period. If they lose money they expect to be reimbursed directly or indirectly through the Marshall plan. This would mean American subsidization of European merchant fleets with low labor standards. And if they get the extra cargoes and raise the rates, too, their chances of losing money are very slight. Yet Hoffman, in his letter to Bridges, wailed that to pay the American rates was to subsidize the American merchant marine, and copies of that letter were sent to many trade-unionists, Senators, and Congressmen who have taken up the cudgels in the SIU's fight to have the Hoffman order rescinded. In the early days of the battle, Hoffman and his assistants apparently believed that this letter was enough to fool everybody. Actually, it fooled nobody.

"What of the rate differential that remains? Is it as devastating as Hoffman would have it sound? The answer is a resounding 'No,' after some of the elements in steamship financing are examined.

"If a minimum of half of the bulk cargoes are to be carried under the American flag as the law now provides, despite Hoffman's peculiar interpretation, they will go for the most part in Libertys under bare-boat charter from the Maritime Commission.

"When a company charters a Liberty from the Commission, it pays $7,500 a month in rent. If 150 Libertys should fail to operate because of the Hoffman order, it would mean a dead loss in revenue to the Government of $1,125,000 a month. The charter hire for Victory ships is $10,000 a month, and if any Victory should fail to operate because of the order the loss of revenue would be correspondingly greater.

"Maritime Commission spokesmen point out that the money from chartering a ship is almost entirely profit to the Government. The loss to the Government is even greater, however, for a ship in the boneyard costs the Commission about $10,000 a year to maintain.

"Then there is the matter of taxes. If a company charters a Liberty, the first 10 percent in gross profit on the capital invested in the operation of that ship is subject to normal corporate income taxes. When the profits go higher, the taxes spiral. After the 10 percent has been taxed separately, the Government divides additional gross profits by the number of days the company actually operated the ship.

"The company is then taxed 50 percent of the first $100-a-day profit, 75 percent of profit between $100 and $300 a day, and 90 percent of any profit above $300 a day. The steamship companies still pay substantial dividends while the Government gets millions and millions in taxes.

"In short, if the Maritime Commission ships are in the boneyard, the Government loses: (1) Millions of dollars in charter hire; (2) millions of dollars in maintenance charges; (3) millions of dollars in corporate taxes; (4) millions of dollars in unemployment benefits paid to seamen and others in the maritime industry.

"Hoffman maintains that if all the bulk cargoes go on foreign-flag ships this country will be able to ship more goods to Europe. This is a dubious argument at best, since shipping costs are only one item in the Marshall plan.

"However, he might better insist that 60 or 70 or even 100 percent of the bulk cargoes go in American ships, and he might ask that the extra taxes collected by the Government from the shipping industry be appropriated to purchase the goods that the people of the war-ravaged nations of Europe must have, despite chiseling in shipping and other matters by some of their businessmen.

"The SIU will carry on its fight to have the Hoffman proposal defeated. This battle is far from over, but each day we gain new allies in the labor movement and Congress. The SIU never has lost a beef and will not lose this one."

[From the Marine Digest]

"ECA RULING SERIOUS BLOW TO UNITED STATES SHIPS

"A newly disclosed ruling by Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman to stop giving a 50–50 share of Marshall plan 'bulk' cargoes to American ships has resulted in a major Government controversy in Washington, D. C.

"In another development on Capitol Hill this week the foreign-aid program came under fire with charges that a 'few giant companies' get the lion's share of exports, while small firms 'go hungry' for freight shipped abroad.

"RULING 'FANTASTIC'

"Maritime Commissioner Grenville Meller described the ruling of Hoffman as 'fantastic' and summoned his fellow Commissioners to a special session to consider the move order to go into effect January 1. Hoffman said he based his action on the ground that the use of higher-cost American shipping for transportation of grain and coal is cutting into funds meant for European recovery.

"Coal shipments to France, he said, cost $4.50 a ton more in American ships than in foreign bottoms. The decision means that no United States shipping will be used to transport American coal, grain, and petroleum products.

"The Foreign Aid Act, passed last April, directed Hoffman to see that American-flag vessels carry at least 50 percent of all United States cargoes financed by ECA, but it added that Hoffman should do so 'as far as practicable,' and to the extent that such vessels are available at market rates—that is, at competitive world freight rates.

"In discussing the situation, Hoffman said:

" 'Any ruling by me that the 50–50 provision should be observed when rates are higher for American ships would be a subsidy to American shipping out of dollar appropriations for European recovery.'

"LION'S SHARE

"The charge that a few giant companies get the lion's share of exports came from Representative Ploeser, Republican, of Missouri, chairman of the House Small Business Committee. Ploeser said that the European-aid program is injuring small United States firms by reducing the supply of strategic and critically short materials in this country. Citing the August report of ECA, on cotton exports, Ploeser said one firm, Anderson, Clayton & Co., and its subsidiaries, received 71.2 percent of August cotton procurement authorizations under the ECA program. Will Clayton, former Assistant Secretary of State, has a large interest in the firm. During the same month, 296 firms obtained all the foreign-aid business of ECA."

[From the Marine Digest]

"A SUGGESTION FOR MR. HOFFMAN

"What is the matter with ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman?

"Instead of busying himself with cutting down the portion of bulk cargo carried in United States bottoms under the Marshall plan, he would be better occupied with making sure that the cargo is put to its proper use in the countries to which it goes.

"While Mr. Hoffman is busying himself with saving a few dollars at the expense of the United States merchant marine, which is justly entitled to 50 percent of the trade, we learn that Great Britain, Belgium, and Holland have resold to American business nearly 20,000 tons of aluminum and lead scrap they bought with Marshall plan dollars.

"Are we to believe that this is a sole and solitary instance or are there further similar disclosures to follow?

"If we were ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman, we would spend more future time checking on the proper use of Marshall plan dollars instead of figuring out a pinch-penny program which may well wreck our already dwindling United States merchant marine.

"Congress issued a direct mandate that no less than half of ECA's cargo should be carried in American ships and it is not within Mr. Hoffman's province to decide otherwise, without the consent of Congress.

"The question, as United States Maritime Commissioner Mellon has already noted, is not only one of getting the lowest possible rates for ECA bulk cargoes, but of preserving the American merchant marine."

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer of July 19, 1948]

"OUR MARITIME DECLINE

"A striking example of the manner in which the American merchant marine is being permitted to decline, just as it did after World War I, is provided by the experience of a pioneer Pacific Northwest shipping company.

"The company—Pope & Talbot, which has been doing business in Puget Sound for just 2 years short of a century—recently paid the Maritime Commission $5,000,000 for four C–3 vessels to operate a freight and passenger service to the east coast of South America.

"To be able to compete with foreign lines—which, incidentally, are using American-built ships obtained from the Maritime Commission—the company must have a subsidy to compensate it for the difference between its high operating costs and the low costs of its competitors.

"The company therefore applied to the Maritime Commission for a subsidy on exactly the same terms as one now being paid to another American company operating over the same route.

"Its application has the backing of every chamber of commerce on the Pacific coast, as the discontinuance of the service would mean the loss of an excellent market for American raw materials—but nothing has happened to date.

"And unless the subsidy is granted, the line will be abandoned.

"There is also the case of the American President Lines, recently and for the second time since the war confronted by the collapse of a replacement program designed to restore it to prewar status.

"This company, which had seven passenger liners in round-the-world service before the war, now has only two. Moreover, of its 20 combination passenger-cargo vessels utilized for war service, only 3 returned.

"Yet the essential measures of Federal cooperation are utterly lacking, which is the explanation of the failure of the company's program of restoration—and of the continuing decline of the whole structure of American maritime enterprise.

"Legislation proposed in the last session of Congress to continue our war-won maritime supremacy was one of many vital measures of national interest which failed of passage.

"In the light of such experiences is it any wonder that foreign maritime enterprise is rapidly outstripping ours?

"While we are stifling our own merchant marine, our alert and progressive maritime competitors—and especially the British—are steadily and surely winning back the position and prestige which they enjoyed before the war.

"Thus the overseas edition of the London Daily Mail was recently able to point out that 'one in every four merchant ships at work today' flies the British flag, as compared with 'one in every three' before the war.

"And it suggests that Great Britain can look forward with confidence to the reestablishment of its traditional supremacy in ocean commerce at a fairly early date.

"While the British merchant fleet lost 2,000 ships during the war out of a total of 3,400 in service at the start, wartime replacements and postwar construction have made a total of 3,100 vessels available today—while new ship construction in this country is at a virtually complete standstill and a major part of our existing tonnage is on the inactive list.

"It is with sound reasoning and laudable purpose that the London Daily Mail comments:

" 'Postwar shipping needs are greater, and will continue greater, than prewar.

" 'We are aiming at a larger merchant navy to secure as much of that increased trade as we can.'

"And it is with good reason that the British newspaper also says:

" 'The British merchant navy's recovery has been magnificent. * * *

" 'Britain will win back the trident she lost to the United States.' "

INTERNAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice. It is entitled, "Relating to the Internal Security of the United States."

I ask unanimous consent that the bill, because of its particular significance, be printed in full in the body of the RECORD, and that an explanation furnished me by way of a letter from the Attorney General be printed in the RECORD following the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 595) relating to the internal security of the United States, introduced by Mr. MCCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 18, United States Code, section 793, be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever, for the purpose of obtaining information respecting the national defense with intent or reason to believe that the information is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation, goes upon, enters, flies over, or otherwise obtains information concerning any vessel, aircraft, work of defense, navy yard, naval station, submarine base, fueling station, fort, battery, torpedo station, dockyard, canal, railroad, arsenal, camp, factory, mine, telegraph, telephone, wireless, or signal station, building, office, or other place connected with the national defense, owned or constructed, or in progress of construction by the United States or under the control of the United States, or of any of its officers, departments, or agencies, or within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, or any place in which any vessel, aircraft, arms, munitions, or other materials or instruments for use in time of war are being made, prepared, repaired, or stored, under any contract or agreement with the United States, or any department or agency thereof, or with any person on behalf of the United States, or otherwise on behalf of the United States, or any other prohibited place so designated by the President by proclamation in time of war or in case of national emergency in which anything for the use of the Army or Navy is being prepared or constructed or stored, information as to which the President has determined would be prejudicial to the national defense; or

"(b) Whoever, for the purpose aforesaid, and with like intent or reason to believe, copies, takes, makes, or obtains, or attempts, to copy, take, make, or obtain, any sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, instrument, appliance, document, writing, or note of anything connected with the national defense; or

"(c) Whoever, for the purpose aforesaid, receives or obtains or agrees or attempts to receive or obtain from any person, or from any source whatever, any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, instrument, appliance, or note, of anything connected with the national defense, knowing or having reason to believe, at the time he receives or obtains, or agrees or attempts to receive or obtain it, that it has been or will be obtained, taken, made, or disposed of by any person contrary to the provisions of this chapter; or

"(d) Whoever, lawfully having possession of, access to, control over, or being entrusted with any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, instrument, appliance, or note relating to the national defense, or information relating to the national defense which could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation, willfully communicates or transmits or attempts to communicate or transmit the same to any person not entitled to receive it, or willfully retains the same and fails to deliver it on demand to the officer or employee of the United States entitled to receive it; or

"(e) Whoever having unauthorized possession of, access to, or control over any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, instrument, appliance, or note relating to the national defense, or information relating to the national defense which could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation, willfully communicates or transmits or attempts to communicate or transmit the same to any person not entitled to receive it, or willfully retains the same and fails to deliver it to the officer or employee of the United States entitled to receive it; or

"(f) Whoever, being entrusted with or having lawful possession or control of any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, note, or information, relating to the national defense, (1) through gross negligence permits the same to be removed from its proper place of custody or delivered to anyone in violation of his trust, or to be lost, stolen, abstracted, or destroyed, or (2) having knowledge that the same has been illegally removed from its proper place of custody or delivered to anyone in violation of his trust, or actually lost, or stolen, abstracted, or destroyed, and fails to make prompt report thereof to his superior officer—

"Shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"(g) If two or more persons conspire to violate the provisions of this section, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be subject to the punishment provided for the offense which is the object of such conspiracy."

SEC. 2. No prosecution shall be brought under title 18, United States Code, section 792, 793, or 794 except upon the express direction of the Attorney General of the United States.

SEC. 3. An indictment for any violation of title 18, United States Code, section 792, 793 or 794 may be found at any time without regard to any statute of limitations. This section shall not authorize prosecution, trial, or punishment for any offense now barred by the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 4. The act of June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 631; 22 U. S. C. 611–621), entitled "An act to require the registration of certain persons employed by agencies to disseminate propaganda in the United States, and for other purposes," as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

(a) Strike out the word "and" at the end of section 1 (c) (3), insert the word "and" at the end of section 1 (c) (4), and add the following subsection immediately after section 1 (c) (4):

"(5) any person who has knowledge of or has received instruction in the espionage, counterespionage, or sabotage service or tactics of a government of a foreign country or a foreign political party, unless such knowledge or instruction has been acquired by reason of civilian or military service with the United States Government;"

(b) Add the following subsection immediately after section 8 (d):

"(e) Failure to file a registration statement or supplements thereto as required by section 2 (a) and section 2 (b) shall be considered a continuing offense for as long as such failure exists, notwithstanding any statute of limitation or other statute to the contrary."

SEC. 5. (a) The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, the Director of the Military Intelligence Division of the Department of the Army, the Director of Intelligence, United States Air Force, and the Chief of the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Navy Department are authorized under rules and regulations as prescribed by the Attorney General, in the conduct of investigations to ascertain, prevent, or frustrate any interference or any attempts or plans for interference with the national security and defense by treason, sabotage, espionage, seditious conspiracy, violations of neutrality laws, violations of the act requiring the registration of agents of foreign principals (act of June 8, 1938, as amended (52 Stat. 631)), violations of the act requiring the registration of organizations carrying on certain activities within the United States (act of October 17, 1940 (54 Stat. 1201)), or in any other manner, to require that telegrams, cablegrams, radiograms, or other wire or radio communications and copies or records thereof, or, upon the express written approval of the Attorney General, that any information obtained by means of intercepting, listening in on, or recording telephone, telegraph, cable, radio, or any other similar messages or communications, be disclosed and delivered to any authorized agent of any one of said investigatorial agencies, without regard to the limitations contained in section 605 of the Communications Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 1103). The information thus obtained shall be admissible in evidence, but only when such evidence is offered in a criminal or civil proceeding in which the Government is a party.

(b) No person shall fail to comply forthwith with the request of any duly authorized person, pursuant to this section, for the disclosure and surrender of any telegram, cablegram, radiogram, or other wire or radio communication, or copies or records thereof in his possession or under his control.

(c) No person shall divulge, publish, or use the existence, contents, substance, purport, or meaning of any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section otherwise than for the purposes hereinbefore enumerated.

(d) Any person who willfully and knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

(e) If any provision of this section or the application of such provision to any circumstance shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of this section and the applicability of such provision to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

(f) For purposes of this section the term "person" shall include any individual, partnership, association, business trust, corporation, or any organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not.

(g) The Attorney General is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 6. (a) Whoever willfully shall violate any regulation or order promulgated or approved by the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to lawful authority for the protection or security of vessels, harbors, ports, or water-front facilities, relating to fire hazards, fire protection, lighting, machinery, guard service, disrepair, disuse, or other unsatisfactory conditions thereon, or the ingress thereto, or egress or removal of persons therefrom, or otherwise providing for safeguarding the same against destruction, loss, or injury by accident, or by enemy action, sabotage, or other subversive acts, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) If any provision of this section or the application of such provision to any circumstance shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of this section and the application of such provision to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 7. (a) Whoever willfully shall violate any regulation or order promulgated or approved by the Secretary of Defense, or by any military commander designated by the Secretary of Defense, pursuant to lawful authority for the protection or security of aircraft, airports, or airport facilities, relating to fire hazards, fire protection, lighting, machinery, guard service, disrepair, disuse, or other unsatisfactory conditions thereon, or the ingress thereto or egress or removal of persons therefrom, or otherwise providing for safeguarding the same against destruction, loss, or injury by accident or by enemy action, sabotage, or other subversive actions, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) If any provision of this section or the application of such provision to any circumstance shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of this section and the application of such provision to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall be construed to require or establish military or civilian censorship or in any way to limit or infringe upon freedom of the press as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

The letter presented by Mr. MCCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1949.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill relating to the internal security of the United States.

The proposal has been drafted to carry out the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Intelligence Committee, composed of representatives of the Military Intelligence Division of the Department of the Army, the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Navy Department, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation of this Department. The recommendations reflect conclusions which were unanimously reached by the Committee, after a thorough study of the provisions and inadequacies of existing law, beginning in 1945, and are based on the needs and experiences of the three agencies during both World War II and peacetime.

The first section of the proposed legislation would amend the fourth paragraph of title 18, United States Code, section 793 (subsec. (d) under proposed amendment), to provide that only those who have lawful possession of the items relating to national defense enumerated therein shall be subject to its provisions. This is proposed in view of the fact that a refusal to deliver such items in response to a proper demand therefor is an element of an offense under the subsection, whereas it is deemed advisable that those who have unauthorized possession of such items should be subject to the provisions of a separate subsection, as hereinafter explained, and required to surrender them to the proper authorities regardless of the demand therefor.

The first section of the proposed legislation would also amend the fourth paragraph of title 18, United States Code, section 793 (subsec. (d) under the proposed amendment), to include "information relating to the national defense which could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation" among the items of which the unauthorized transmission or retention would be unlawful. The phrase "which could be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation" would modify only "information relating to the national defense" and not the other items enumerated in the subsection. It is deemed advisable to broaden the provision to include such information, in order to render the law more effective against unauthorized transmissions and retentions which may not come within the existing specifically enumerated items but which are considered nonetheless dangerous to the national security.

The first section of the proposed legislation would amend title 18, United States Code, section 793, to provide (subsec. (e) under proposed amendment) that those who have unauthorized possession of the items enumerated therein must surrender possession thereof to the proper authorities regardless of a demand therefor. Existing law provides no penalty for the unauthorized possession of such items unless a demand for them is made by the person entitled to receive them. The dangers attending the unauthorized possession of the items enumerated in this statute are self-evident, and it is deemed advisable to require their surrender in such a case, regardless of demand, especially since their unauthorized possession may be unknown to the authorities who would otherwise make the demand. In summary, the only difference between subsection (d) and subsection (e) of title 18, United States Code, section 793, if amended as proposed, would be that a demand by the person entitled to receive the items would be a necessary element of an offense under subsection (d) where the possession is lawful, whereas such a demand would not be a necessary element of an offense under subsection (e) where the possession is unauthorized.

The first section of the proposed legislation would amend title 18, United States Code, section 793, by adding a provision (subsec. (f) (2)) to provide for the punishment of those who are entrusted with the items relating to national defense enumerated therein and who have knowledge of, but fail to report, the loss, theft, abstraction, destruction, or unlawful transmission of such items. The danger of such an item, e. g., a code book or plan of operation, being lost, stolen, or compromised by the enemy or prospective enemy, needs no emphasis. As an illustration, it is now common knowledge that our compromise of an enemy coding system was an important factor in our defense and operations against the enemy in the early and vital stages of the recent war. It is not unreasonable to assume that the advantage would be reversed should an enemy compromise a coding system of the United States. The existing law provides no penalty for the failure to report such knowledge by those entrusted with the above items.

The first section of the proposed legislation (subsec. (g) under proposed amendment) would amend title 18, United States Code, section 793, to provide a penalty for a conspiracy to violate the section. Section 794 presently includes a conspiracy provision, and there appears to be no reason why a conspiracy to violate section 793 should not be similarly punishable.

The first section of the proposed legislation would designate the several paragraphs of title 18, United States Code, section 793, as subsections (a) through (g) for purposes of convenient reference.

Section 2 of the proposed legislation would provide that no prosecution could be brought under title 18, United States Code, section 792, 793, or 794 except upon the express direction of the Attorney General.

Section 3 of the proposed legislation would provide that an indictment for the violation of section 792, 793, or 794 of title 18, United States Code, could be found at any time without regard to any statute of limitations. Under existing law (18 U. S. C. 3282), the statute of limitations with respect to a violation of section 792, 793, or 794 in peacetime is only 3 years. A violation of subsection 794 (b) or (c) during war constitutes a capital offense and is therefore not subject to the statute of limitations (18 U. S. C. 3282). In view of the fact that a violation of section 792, 793, or 794 during either peace or war may not be detected, or the identity of the violator discovered until more than 3 years after the violation was committed, e. g., until hostilities cease and the records of the enemy are accessible, it is considered advisable to amend the law so that the prosecution of an espionage violation may be instituted at any time. Such an amendment would also permit the prosecution and consequent public disclosures of such offenses to be held in abeyance, for strategical purposes, pending the detection and apprehension of other offenders who may also be involved in the same or affiliated espionage ring. The amendment, of course, because of the constitutional bar against ex post facto criminal laws, would not authorize the prosecution or punishment of an offense which is already barred by existing law.

Section 4 (a) of the proposed legislation would amend the Foreign Agents Registration Act of June 8, 1938, as amended (22 U. S. C. 611–621), by adding a subsection 1 (c) (5) immediately after subsection 1 (c) (4) (22 U. S. C. 611 (c) (4)) to require the registration of persons who have knowledge of, or have received instruction in, the espionage, counter espionage, or sabotage service or tactics, of a foreign government or a foreign political party, unless such knowledge or instruction has been acquired by reason of civilian or military service with the United States Government. Under existing law, a person trained by a foreign government for purposes of espionage and sabotage is immune from prosecution provided there is no substantial evidence of his having violated the Espionage Act, and he is in no way obliged to divulge either his intentions or the very useful information which is peculiarly within his knowledge, information which if acquired by our counter-intelligence agencies could spell the difference between success and catastrophe in counteracting the plans and tactics of an enemy. Examples of those who would come within this category are those whose operations may defy detection and those who may be dispatched to this country for purposes of espionage or sabotage and who either postpone their operations until an opportune time or, for fear of apprehension or other reason, abandoned their mission. The amendment is proposed for a threefold purpose, namely, to discourage further the unknown presence of potential spies and saboteurs; to provide a basis for the prosecution of unregistered potential spies and saboteurs before they commit an act of espionage or sabotage; and to assist this Government in its counter-intelligence work by acquiring the information regarding foreign espionage and sabotage systems and tactics that would be disclosed by those who elected to register rather than run the risk of prosecution for not so registering.

Section 4 (b) of the proposed legislation would amend the Foreign Agents' Registration Act by adding a subsection 8 (e) immediately after subsection 8 (d) (22 U. S. C. 618 (d)) to provide that a failure to file a registration statement or supplements thereto as required by sections 2 (a) and (b) (22 U. S. C. 612 (a) (b)) shall be considered a continuing offense for as long as such failure exists, notwithstanding any statute of limitations or other statute to the contrary. The purpose of this proposed amendment is to permit the prosecution of an offender at any time during the period he continues to disregard the statute and not merely within a 3-year period from the time that he first became subject to the law and should have registered but failed to do so.

Section 5 of the proposed legislation would authorize, under rules and regulations as prescribed by the Attorney General, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Director of the Military Intelligence Division of the Department of the Army, the Director of Intelligence, United States Air Force, and the Chief of the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Navy Department, in the conduct of investigations involving the national security and the registration of foreign agents and organizations, to require that radio, telegraph, and telephone communications be disclosed and delivered to the authorized agents of the foregoing investigatorial agencies. The obtaining of information by interception of communications would be authorized only upon the express written approval of the Attorney General. Information thus obtained would be admissible in evidence, but only when such evidence is offered in a criminal or civil proceeding in which the United States Government is a party. It would be unlawful for any of the information to be divulged except for the specifically enumerated purposes of this section. A violation of the proposed statute would constitute a felony and would be punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. Section 605 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U. S. C. 605) permits the disclosure of such information only in response to a subpena issued by a court of competent jurisdiction or on demand of other lawful authority. The proposed statute would provide the necessary lawful authority to the above investigatorial agencies and assist them considerably in the performance of their duties. It seems incongruous that the existing law should protect our enemies and hamper our protectors in such matters, and it is proposed that the anomaly be corrected as suggested by this section.

Section 6 of the proposed legislation would reenact as permanent legislation the act that provided a maximum penalty of a $5,000 fine and 1 year imprisonment for the willful violation of regulations or orders promulgated by the Secretary of the Navy respecting the protection or security of vessels, harbors, ports, or water-front facilities, approved July 9, 1943 (50 App. U. S. C. 1312), the expiration date of which was June 30, 1947. This is deemed advisable in order to continue the additional protection from both accidental and deliberate danger which the statute afforded such vital facilities. As we have so tragically observed during the war, e. g., the burning of the Normandie, the Port Chicago, Calif., disaster, and later the devastation in Texas City, Tex., there is a need to strengthen, rather than relax, the law relating to the safety of maritime and water-front facilities.

Section 7 of the proposed legislation would provide a maximum penalty of a $5,000 fine and imprisonment for 1 year for the willful violation of any regulation or order promulgated or approved by the Secretary of Defense for the protection of aircraft and aircraft facilities. This section is similar to section 6 of this proposal for the protection of maritime facilities, and its purpose is self-evident.

The entire proposed bill has been drafted to serve the needs of the Departments of the Army, the Air Force, the Navy, and Justice in the successful discharge of their responsibility to protect and improve the internal security of the Nation. The swift and more devastating weapons of modern warfare, coupled with the treacherous operations of those who would weaken our country internally, preliminary to and in conjunction with external attack, have made it imperative that we strengthen and maintain an alert and effective peacetime vigilance.

The enclosed proposed legislation is transmitted herewith for your consideration and such action as you may deem appropriate.

Sincerely,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this bill is of unusual importance. Going to the Committee of the Judiciary, as it will, it will be submitted to a subcommittee for study. The bill touches upon many things which heretofore we have regarded as exceedingly sacred to the individual; for instance, the right to be protected from wire tapping, and other rights, which are affected by powers given to the Department of Justice. In my judgment the bill should receive careful consideration, because those weapons which we afford for national protection and defense might be turned to the destruction or impairment of individual human rights. Therefore the bill should have the study and consideration of every Member of the Senate, as well as of the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "FINAL REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES DE SOTO EXPEDITION COMMISSION"

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,000 copies of the Final Report of the United States De Soto Expedition Commission (H. Doc. 71, 76th Cong.) for the use of the Senate document room.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution to establish the joint committee on social security, to be composed of members of the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee. It is identical with Senate Concurrent Resolution 13 of the Eightieth Congress.

The purpose of this joint committee would be to prepare a thorough evaluation of our present obsolete social-security system, and to formulate recommendations to the Congress on a comprehensive security plan for the Nation. It is obvious that the problem of security for our elderly folks represents one of the greatest challenges of modern times to our country or any other land. It seems incongruous that the Congress should have an efficient Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and yet should lack such a committee when it comes to the field of social security, which it seems to me, is just as important as taxing our people. I well recognize that there have been countless studies in the field of social security, and the purposes of this joint committee would not be to delay action upon the various plans presented as a result of these studies. On the contrary, through such a committee, we could secure a comprehensive analysis of the President's suggestions for social-security revision, and of the many suggestions which have come from outside—from labor unions, industry, and so forth.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on Social Security (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee) to be composed of eight members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the need for and advisability of modification or enlargement of the present social-security program, and to consider any proposals submitted to the Congress in connection therewith. The joint committee shall report, from time to time, to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, or, in its discretion, to the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, the results of its studies and investigations together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $ , shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

INVESTIGATION OF CONTRACTS WITH RAILROADS FOR CARRYING UNITED STATES MAILS

Mr. LANGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 34), which was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service is authorized and directed (1) to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to contracts with railroads for carrying United States mail with a view to ascertaining whether, in the light of changes in the volume of mail carried, any change in the rates charged for such service is necessary or advisable, and (2) to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation together with such recommendations for necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

THE FREEDOM TRAIN

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the Freedom Train is now in Washington.

This is most appropriate at a time when the attention of every American is centered upon the inauguration of our President.

Since it was dedicated in Philadelphia—on Constitution Day, September 17, 1947—the Freedom Train has made a journey of patriotic inspiration covering 33,500 miles.

More than three and a half million men, women, and children have visited the train in 325 cities throughout the United States.

The American people are deeply indebted to Attorney General Tom Clark who brilliantly conceived the idea from which the Freedom Train was developed.

Also deserving of high praise is the American Heritage Foundation, headed by Winthrop W. Aldrich, of New York, under whose able direction the Freedom Train pilgrimage was conducted.

The Freedom Train carries 127 of the most precious documents of American history. On the train are found the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, Lincoln's Gettysburg Address and many other papers dear to the hearts of men and women all over the world who love individual freedom.

I had the honor of taking part in the dedication ceremonies held at Philadelphia, September 17, 1947.

The program was presided over by Arthur C. Kaufmann, now president of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. The train was christened by Mrs. Kaufmann.

Mr. Aldrich was present and explained the plan of the American Heritage Foundation.

The principal address on that occasion was made by Attorney General Tom Clark, and I now ask unanimous consent to have his address printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF HON. TOM C. CLARK, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, UPON THE OCCASION OF DEDICATION OF THE FREEDOM TRAIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA., SEPTEMBER 17, 1947

Mr. Aldrich, trustees and officers of the foundation, and guests, this is a magnificent occasion. I know that all of us here have a feeling of deep gratitude to the officers and trustees of the American Heritage Foundation, to the Librarian of Congress, and to the Archivist of the United States, who have played so big a part, and to the many others who have made documents available, or have helped in many, many other ways. They cannot all be publicly acknowledged, but surely their work is rewarded by the feeling of pride in our past, and the determination that our future shall at least equal that past, which comes to every man who walks through this fine train and, as a distinguished American used to say, "Look at the record."

It is a good record. There is none other in the world that can match it. And it was made by men. Indeed, the inspiring pageant of freedom which is dramatized by the great historic documents aboard this Freedom Train is a reminder to all of us, and to each of us, that men are the architects of their own liberty. If men are to have freedom they must build it for themselves. No one man, no little group of men can fashion freedom to suit their own ends and give it in return for subservience, or withhold it to obtain conformity. That is not freedom at all.

None of these landmarks in our history which are aboard this train was wrought singly by any one man. Each was born of the labors of many men, in their turn representing many others. So it is with freedom. No man can have it for himself alone and deny it to others. No man can have freedom for himself at all unless he is willing to share it with every other man without regard to his brother's color, or his race, or his creed. And exactly in the degree that we deny freedom and the realistic blessings of liberty to any man, exactly in that degree do we make prisoners of ourselves. All must be free, or none of us is wholly free.

The faint heart, the grudging, unwilling heart, those who think of freedom as something for a few, will make prisoners of us all. And if we so foolishly make prisoners of ourselves, in our own good home, what chance can there be for freedom elsewhere in the world? Let us have no second-class citizens in America, for whatever ugly reason, and in time men can walk in the sunshine of freedom every place in the world. Unless we Americans share our freedom with our neighbors and with the world, in the end we shall have none for ourselves.

Equality before the law and in the sight of God for every man. That is the ideal of freedom which the American way of life has to offer to humanity. It is a goal yet to be completely achieved in our own fair land and in the broad reaches of the world. Surely, these magnificent documents show us the way.

Mr. Aldrich, I would be less than candid if I did not tell you that this colorful Freedom Train and the program of the American Heritage Foundation have far exceeded the modest conception in my mind at the outset. It is a demonstration, in the field of the concrete political principles to which this Nation is enduringly attached, of the vigor and vitality by which the American people beat down the threat of fascism and communism. Into this program of rededication, of which this Freedom Train is the climax, has gone the work and the enthusiasm and the thinking of a fine group of representative Americans. I say representative because they are of all faiths, races, and many shades of political belief. They have united together in firm faith in the integrity and humanity of American principles. I know, as all of us here today know, that the American people will be deeply stirred by the illumination of our future which this look into our past gives to all of us.

As the chief law-enforcement officer of the Federal Government, my concern over the growing disrespect for the rights of individual citizens has been no secret. It is my belief that the American Heritage Foundation program will do much to correct and abate this great evil. Thus, as the sponsoring official, with gratitude for the tremendous task which the foundation has performed so far, and with pride in the program which you propose, I am happy to deliver the Freedom Train and its priceless documents into your safekeeping. I know it is in good hands.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I also had the honor of speaking on that occasion, and I ask unanimous consent to have my address printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF UNITED STATES SENATOR EDWARD MARTIN, OF PENNSYLVANIA, AT THE DEDICATION OF FREEDOM TRAIN, PHILADELPHIA, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1947

What is happening in Philadelphia today is good for America and for Americans. We are starting Freedom Train on its year-long journey about the United States. We are sending to the people the documented story of our Nation's proudest heritage. By means of this train Americans everywhere—old Americans and new Americans, no matter what color and no matter what creed—will be brought closely and vividly into contact with the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence, William Penn's Charter of Privileges to the colonists of Pennsylvania, and many other immortal documents.

That cannot fail to make better citizens of us all by reminding us whence we came and how it is we enjoy inalienable rights which the citizens of most other countries would regard as rare privileges.

Too much credit cannot be given Attorney General Tom Clark for having brilliantly conceived and developed this idea. Too much credit cannot be given those patriotic Americans who formed themselves into the American Heritage Foundation to carry forward the program and who have privately financed it.

It is particularly appropriate that this train should be christened and should commence its journey in the city of Philadelphia, the birthplace of American independence, on Constitution Day. I suppose, however, any day would be the right day for Freedom Train to bring its priceless cargo to the city which is so closely interwoven with so many of the documents carried on this train.

I need not remind a Philadelphia audience that it was here, just a few blocks from where we stand, that the Articles of Confederation were signed, the Declaration of Independence proclaimed, and the American Constitution adopted to become the basic law of our land.

I don't need to remind Philadelphians that this is the city of Independence Hall, the cradle of liberty, whose walls echoed the stirring words that "these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states."

Here reposes the Liberty Bell, sacred symbol of freedom "throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof." Here stands Carpenters' Hall, meeting place of the First Continental Congress, and you have the little house on Arch Street where Betsy Ross made the first flag. It was here, at Old Christ Church, that Washington and other patriots whose memory we revere prayed for divine guidance in their conduct of the affairs of the infant Republic.

Not many miles from here is Valley Forge where General Washington's ragged forces, who were later to be trained into a victorious army, suffered in the terrible winter of 1777–78. Not far away is Washington's Crossing where, the winter before, General Washington ferried these men to New Jersey to win the battles of Trenton and Princeton, the first victories of the infant American forces.

This is the city in which George Washington's magnificent Farewell Address first appeared, printed in the Philadelphia Daily American Advertiser, in 1796. That document is on Freedom Train and its anniversary is only two days off, on September 19, when this train will still be here.

These are just a few reasons why it would have been inconceivable for Freedom Train to begin its journey elsewhere than in Philadelphia. For it was here, more than a century and a half ago, that the original Train of Freedom began its journey through history to undying greatness and creation of a country which, like its first President, stands today first in war and first in peace.

I like what has been said of our Republic that it is "the last best hope on earth."

I like, too, the story of that first Constitution Day whose anniversary we are celebrating. When the document had been ratified, Philadelphia's own Benjamin Franklin stepped from Independence Hall into the street where a multitude of citizens was waiting.

"What kind of a government have you given us?," they asked. Franklin replied: "We have given you a Republic—if you can keep it."

Fellow Americans—this is a good time and a good place to assure Ben Franklin across the years:

"We have kept it. Thousands of heroes have shed their blood to defend it in the 160 years since that day in 1787. We still cleave to that Republic and that Constitution."

Today let us rededicate ourselves to American freedom and to that Constitution. Under it we have enjoyed the greatest blessings ever given to a people—freedom of religion, wide civil liberties, and freedom of expression—the press, the radio, the motion pictures. All three have served the country well in war and in peace.

The film industry has produced motion pictures of patriotism in the same tradition as Freedom Train. Many patriotic messages have gone over the air by radio.

We cannot praise too highly the leadership of the free American press in patriotic inspiration for our people. Throughout our history the newspapers have served as beacons of light, guiding all of us to a greater appreciation of our liberties and reminding us of the responsibilities which these liberties impose upon every citizen.

Within the past few days the press demonstrated anew how it serves by uncovering a Communist plot to discredit Freedom Train. The plot was to deceive the people into believing that all of this—this train, these great documents, and what they stand for, is merely a propaganda plant by reactionaries and big business. The Communists called it "Wall Street imperialism." This falls of its own weight of course, by the fact that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Philip Murray, president of the CIO, are vice chairmen of the American Heritage Foundation, sponsoring Freedom Train. Other leading Americans are associated with this great patriotic movement.

I don't know if there are any Communists within the sound of my voice. If there are, let me assure them, as well as all others, this time they have left themselves and their motives naked. Even the most gullible cannot fail to understand that here is the kind of movement against which Benjamin Franklin was warning when he told those early Philadelphians to keep the Republic.

There is an impressive sermon in this for all good Americans. If anyone in Russia had planned deliberately to warp and distort the meaning of a similar train there—not a Freedom Train, but a Totalitarian Train—you know what would have happened to him.

But we are different here. We have a Constitution and a Bill of Rights. We have our civil liberties. If people here talk dangerous foolishness, we guard against it not with slave camps or firing squads, but with intelligent education, with our great channels of free expression, and with even-handed laws.

One of the great messages Freedom Train can carry to the whole Nation is this:

Guard those precious civil liberties for all. If we permit them to be wiped out for some minorities—political or racial or religious—then we shall lose them for all the people. The majority, too, will wake up one morning to find that its civil liberties are gone. These things are indivisible. All the people must share in them, or none can possess them long.

That is important to remember in these days when we are threatened by a philosophy which gives the individual no civil rights at all. In that system the people are completely subordinate to the state, which, in turn, is a tool in the hands of a few willful men subject to no law but themselves. I say we can fight that system and win without stooping to its tactics.

Freedom Train is the time-tested proof. Walk along its corridors and what do you find—the Magna Carta, the English Bill of Rights of 1689, the Pennsylvania Charter of Privileges of 1701, the various early laws for religious freedom, America's Constitution and Bill of Rights, the Emancipation Proclamation of 1863, yes, the nineteenth amendment granting women suffrage and last year's Proclamation of Independence for the Philippine Islands.

There is the main stream of human progress for 1,000 years—broad, deep, calm, and powerful. Each document is a rung in the ladder of greater spiritual and temporal freedom for the individual. Each carries man upward in human dignity and in civil liberties.

By such steps and such tradition has America grown and prospered.

Certainly it will profit us nothing to recede down the ladder. We do not want to retrace our steps toward serfdom, in fear of unwarranted search and arrest, and fear of the heavy hand of government upon the shoulder of every citizen.

I feel strongly about the dangerous crackpots and fractional Americans who take their orders from Moscow. But I am equally strong in opposition to hooded men who take the law into their own hands, and against vigilantes who supersede the good laws of our country.

There are rumbles here and there by some who would violate the civil liberties of persons they merely suspect. There are hotheaded groups branding all foreign born in our land as subversive. Many of our most loyal and best citizens were born across the water. All of us are descendants of foreign born who immigrated to the New World. In every branch of our armed forces foreign born and their sons died wearing the American uniform in the recent war.

If we permit bands of vigilantes to determine who may have civil liberties and who may not; who may work in peace and who shall be persecuted, the result will be exactly the opposite from what the Constitution provided. We will not beat communism that way. We will feed its fires. Persecuted people will turn in bitterness from Americanism to communism. Inadvertently, we shall be building a fifth column within our gates.

I am not talking appeasement. I am talking for equal justice as set forth in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

I am talking against doing in this country what Hitler did in Germany and Stalin does in Russia today. Those misguided Americans who have set themselves up as a drumhead court over their fellow citizens should remember that our ancestors came here to escape religious, racial, or economic intolerance in the old country. They fled from places where they had no civil liberties to a land where they could enjoy such rights. Those who have come in recent times have turned to America for the same reasons.

Let us not merely talk the Golden Rule. Let us practice it. One way is to give to others the same protection under the Constitution and the Bill of Rights which we claim for curselves. In exercising our rights we must not forget the obligations of American citizenship.

Let Freedom Train carry this message to the Nation.

I wish that when it has finished its tour of the United States, a year from now, it could be sent across the oceans to other lands so that the whole world could see it and learn from it and absorb the rich and great spirit of America's heritage.

Godspeed this caravan of Americanism.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, further ceremonies were held in Philadelphia on January 9 of this year, when the Freedom Train returned to that city.

Again Attorney General Clark was the speaker of the day. I now ask unanimous consent to have his address on that occasion printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF HON. TOM C. CLARK, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, AT THE FREEDOM TRAIN EXERCISES UNDER THE AUSPICES OF FORCES UNITED FOR INTELLIGENT CITIZENSHIP, ACADEMY OF MUSIC, PHILADELPHIA, PA., JANUARY 9, 1949

It is most fitting that the Freedom Train, in its final days of travel under the auspices of the American Heritage Foundation, should return to the City of Brotherly Love. Here, 16 months ago, on September 17, 1947, it began its history-making tour in celebration of the one hundred and seventieth anniversary of Constitution Day—probably the most important day in the Nation's calendar, since it marks the beginning of the United States of America.

This brilliant and inspirational journey will come to an end in a few days during the panoramic demonstration marking the inauguration of the President of the United States. This climax, too, is fitting, as it symbolizes the right of a free people to govern themselves and is a tribute to the President who gave the project his blessing.

We are not assembled here to deliver or hear eulogies on the expiration of this shrine on wheels. This is a joyous occasion. We are here to honor and pay glowing tribute to the public-spirited officers of the American Heritage Foundation, and its efficient staff.

We also laud the thousands of citizens of the 320 cities in every State of the Union who so happily cooperated in making it possible for the train to travel 35,000 miles, be visited by over four and a half million people and enabled millions of others to participate in patriotic exercises that were spearheaded by the coming and going of the train.

While the train has run its present course, the spirit continues on and will continue on as long as freemen live to carry out the spirit of the sacred documents that it carried. Some may ask, Is it enduring?

Yes, it is enduring. The good that is done is not measured as we measure potatoes in a bushel, or cold statistics on a chart, or cloth by the yardstick. You can't estimate the spirit and influence of the train in that manner.

Some of that influence is very apparent before us here at this hour.

Your Philadelphia organization—Forces United for Intelligent Citizenship—which sponsors this memorable patriotic event today, is a direct outgrowth of the Freedom Train's first visit to this community. Your movement is an educational program for better citizenship on the grass-roots level, your members shouldering responsibilities inherent in a free society. That is an excellent way to keep the wheels of democracy turning in the right direction.

Forces United promotes happiness and harmony among men when it serves as a meeting ground for uniting persons and organizations interested in furthering the brotherhood of man and emphasizing the supreme worth of the individual.

Another cheering part of this wonderful program is the presence of these newly naturalized citizens who come from many different lands. They have received the most precious possession this country has to offer—that of United States citizenship.

Since the beginning of our Republic millions of others from all races and all places have come here to share in our heritage and have contributed their part in building and enriching America.

Surely, the train's mission, that of spreading the gospel of freedom, will endure. The hundreds of thousands of children from the quiet, small towns and teeming centers, often braving the fury of the elements to view the immortal papers, will remember and cherish all through life what they saw and read and heard. Beyond that, what they learned will be passed on to their children and their children's children.

The Freedom Train has not ended. It is the endless story of the United States—the story of you and me, of free enterprise—that democratic principle and way that has made our Nation the inspiration of freedom-loving people everywhere.

The unity of purpose—the cooperation—which brought together educators, labor and religious leaders, captains of industry, financiers, members of the press and radio, is strikingly illustrative of how America rallies to a noble cause.

I, too, like other Americans, have gained much from this experience. The Freedom Train has proved a moving witness of the people's impregnable faith in America and of the devout love and the deep reverence they hold in their hearts for its institutions.

The fervent and loyal reception accorded this carrier of our precious documents of liberty is a thundering answer to the enemies of our cherished way of life. No wicked ideology will find a hiding place in the hearts of such Americans.

With an alert America and God's help, we will keep it that way.

EXEMPTION FROM ADMISSIONS TAX OF CERTAIN TICKETS TO INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 85, a joint resolution which was passed yesterday by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate House Joint Resolution 85, which will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Georgia ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that it be laid before the Senate. I am about to move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 85) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1949.

The joint resolution was read the second time by title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BALDWIN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, unanimous consent is required for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection, but I want to be sure that we understand the procedure. This is a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection, and the Chair heard none.

Is there objection to the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 85?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a preliminary statement. I have conferred with all members of the Senate Committee on Finance on both sides, and all have agreed that the joint resolution might come up for consideration without reference to a committee. Members thus agreeing do not necessarily bind themselves to support the joint resolution, but they all agree that it may be considered without reference to a committee. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has already been granted.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this joint resolution is the same resolution which has heretofore been passed at all times, so far as I know, when we had an admission tax which covered the sale of seats on Pennsylvania Avenue and tickets to certain functions incident to the inaugural ceremonies. In 1940 a resolution almost in the same terms as the present joint resolution, was passed by the Congress and approved by the President on October 9, 1940. That resolution provided for the appointment of the Inaugural Committee, but since the Inaugural Committee has already been functioning, the present resolution merely exempts the tickets which are sold by or on the authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies from the tax imposed by section 1700 of the Internal Revenue Code, being the admissions tax.

It is understood, of course, that actually the only tickets which will be sold by the Inaugural Committee are tickets to the grandstand seats for the inaugural parade, tickets to the inaugural ball, and tickets to the inaugural gala concert. Of course, all tickets sold by individuals, partnerships, or corporations are subject to the tax. Only tickets sold under the direct authority of the Inaugural Committee or by the committee itself are to be exempted from the tax.

It is also understood that it is the purpose of the Inaugural Committee to pay to general charities a certain percentage of the receipts if the receipts exceed the expenditures in preparing for the inaugural exercises. I therefore ask that the Senate approve the joint resolution in order that it may go to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is open to amendment.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 541 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1941 (terminating certain exemptions from admissions tax), section 1701 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code shall apply with respect to amounts paid on or after the first day of the first calendar month which begins after the date of enactment of this joint resolution, for admission.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to exempt from the admission tax the admission fees charged to agricultural fairs. In the first session of the Eightieth Congress the House passed a bill which would exempt the admission fees to agricultural fairs from the imposition of this tax. That bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance. Because at that particular time, as I understand, the Finance Committee was considering a general over-all amendment to the excise-tax measures, the bill was not reported.

It seems to me that if we are to exempt from the admissions tax admissions to the different ceremonies mentioned in this particular measure, it is only fair and just that admissions to agricultural fairs should also be exempted.

Agricultural fairs are one of the oldest institutions in the United States. For many years they furnished a great source of encouragement to agriculture. They afford opportunity for the farmer to learn new things, and at the same time display the results of his own energy and ability. They are conducted primarily and essentially in the public interest and in the interest of agriculture. I believe that they merit far more serious and sympathetic consideration than do the exemptions asked for in this joint resolution.

At the time this question was previously before the Senate, as I stated a moment ago, the Committee on Finance was concerned with the general question of excise-tax legislation, and it did not have time to consider the question here involved. This offers us a good opportunity to take action similar to that taken in the House in the last Congress, and exempt agricultural fairs from the imposition of admission taxes.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut, as well as the Senator from Georgia, the adoption of this amendment would make it necessary for the joint resolution to go back to the House. I do not know how complicated the result would be. The result might possibly be no legislation whatever on this subject. That might result in having the inaugural committee ask Congress to appropriate money to pay a deficit which might be incurred in the expenses.

We understand that all the expenses for all these functions, outside of the expense involved in the erection of the platform on the east front of the Capitol Building and the expenses incurred by the joint congressional committee, are not paid out of the Treasury, but are paid by a sum of money raised in the District of Columbia by private subscription, and the sale of the tickets is to enable the inaugural committee to reimburse itself for the outlay here in the District of Columbia.

If we pass no joint resolution at all exempting these tickets from taxation—and such action might in some way retard the sale of the tickets and might result in a deficit on the part of the inaugural committee in connection with these expenses—I wonder whether we would be encouraging the presentation to Congress of some sort of resolution providing for reimbursement of the local inaugural committee for expenses incurred in connection with the inauguration. Has the Senator any view or opinion on that phase of this matter?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I should say that as I have ridden up and down Constitution Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue, I have seen signs on most of the groups of bleachers and seats indicating that all have been sold.

So far as causing a delay in the action of the House of Representatives is concerned, let me say that at the first session of the Eightieth Congress a bill exempting from taxation admissions to agricultural fairs was passed by the House of Representatives. Of course, we do not know that the House will do the same thing this time, but at least once in recent months it has gone on record in favor of this particular exemption.

It does not seem to me that it would cause undue delay if we were to adopt this amendment and send the measure back to the House of Representatives. This amendment is in the interest of agriculture and in the interest of the farmers and in the interest generally of the people who attend agricultural fairs, which are nonprofit functions and are designed to promote agriculture and the public interest in agriculture generally. It seems to me that inasmuch as the House of Representatives has once indicated its interest in support of a measure such as this, we shall not cause any undue delay by giving the House an opportunity again to register its approval or disapproval, if that be the case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am sympathetic with the objective the Senator from Connecticut has in mind with regard to agricultural fairs, and I have previously expressed my sympathy toward that objective. However, it has no relationship to the object of the particular joint resolution which is now pending.

I am somewhat concerned in my own mind as to whether an extraneous matter, however meritorious it may be, should be added to this joint resolution, which is purely for local purposes. I should like to have the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] give his view about the matter, if he can enlighten us on it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, obviously I would have to oppose the amendment.

In the first place, no agricultural fairs are to be held right away. Before the people get around to holding agricultural fairs again the Congress will have ample opportunity to consider the whole subject of excise taxes, including admission taxes, in some general tax measure which will come to the Senate from the House of Representatives.

Obviously also the House committee would reject the joint resolution if we were to attach this amendment to it, because we would be asking the House to pass upon a matter to which that committee has not, at least in the Eighty-first Congress, given the slightest consideration.

I think it would be most unfortunate if the Senator from Connecticut were to press for the adoption of his amendment now. There are many persons in this country who wish to have the fur tax removed, and there are many persons who wish to have the jewelry tax removed. In the past the House of Representatives has passed some joint resolutions to that effect. There are many persons who wish to have the transportation tax removed. Now, to single out agricultural fairs, which probably will not commence to exhibit until next September or October, before which time we shall have practically an entire year during which to consider this matter, would, I think, be unwise.

It seems to me that the Senator takes, at least, a very inconsistent position in offering this amendment to the joint resolution. Certainly, if the Inaugural Committee sustains a deficit, the Committee will come to the Congress and ask that it be reimbursed, and probably that will follow, because if this tax were paid, in most instances now it would be paid by the Inaugural Committee. The Inaugural Committee never thought that Congress would do otherwise than it has done heretofore. In fact, if the Inaugural Committee had read the joint resolution which was adopted in October 1940, it would have been assured that Congress would not deny the privilege of this exemption on the tickets for this particular occasion, which does not recur within the next 4 years.

I can assure the Senator that during the consideration of any tax measure ample opportunity will be afforded to consider all the excise taxes; but I would not want to be bludgeoned into accepting an amendment offered on the floor without an opportunity on the part of the committee to consider it, and I would not wish to ask the House of Representatives to accept an amendment of that sort to a measure of this kind. So I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not press for the adoption of his amendment.

If the Senator does press for its adoption, I can assure him that, if it prevails, its only effect will be to kill this particular joint resolution; and then the Inaugural Committee will come to the Congress and request an appropriation, of course.

I can also assure the Senator that a great many of these tickets—in fact, the larger portion of them—have been sold less the tax, on the assumption that Congress would do precisely what it has done in the past, namely, exempt these admissions from the tax.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I must confess that I find myself somewhat unhappy to be opposing the position the distinguished Senator from Georgia has taken, for I have the highest admiration for him, not only as a man, but as a statesman.

In the first session of the Eightieth Congress I introduced a bill or an amendment which would have taken care of this particular situation. However, that measure did not get to a vote.

Mr. President, this is a revenue measure; and the Senate cannot originate any revenue measure, of course. The only opportunity the Senate has to pass upon a matter pertaining to revenue and taxation is when some bill or other measure on the subject comes to the Senate from the House of Representatives. So it seems to me that it is appropriate to discuss this particular tax at this time.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia has mentioned other excise taxes. He has mentioned, for example, the tax on transportation, the tax on furs, and other matters of that kind. Those are excise taxes, but they are not admission taxes. The field of admission taxes is a very limited one, and the amendment deals exclusively with an admission tax. That is the matter now before the Senate: Shall we grant an exemption from taxation on admissions to the various ceremonies here in Washington?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. As I understand the Senator's amendment, he proposes to relieve county and public agricultural fairs from amusement taxes.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Does the Senator propose to include in the exemption commercial excise taxes in connection with fairs or commercial ventures?

Mr. BALDWIN. No. The amendment, I may say to my distinguished friend from Iowa, is concerned exclusively with taxes on admissions to agricultural fairs.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may say to the Senator that in my State the question of the amusement tax on county and State agricultural fairs has been a very troublesome thing for a long time. The State legislature and boards of supervisors from time to time appropriate as a rule a specific amount of money to each county fair, and a specific amount of money to the State fair, and in case of a deficit, they appropriate moneys to make up the deficit. It would seem to me that, under such circumstances, the county agricultural fairs and the State fair, as educational, and importantly educational, institutions in the agricultural areas, are every bit as much entitled to tax exemption as are the ceremonies of day after tomorrow and of the days following.

I have no objection to exempting the inaugural ceremonies from amusement taxes. I do not know whether or not those ceremonies will be considered by some people as amusements, but I had just as soon exempt them, except that I believe, in the same category the county agricultural fairs in my State and the State fair, which bring great benefits and progressive development and information to the farmers, and other people all over the State, should equally enjoy freedom from a tax on something that is not an amusement but is a public educational institution. I think the Senator's amendment is well filed. I think it merits consideration at this time.

The Senator pointed out a while ago that the question of exempting agricultural fairs from the tax has been acted on heretofore by the House. It is not at all a new subject. It is a subject well known to every Member of the Senate, and it has had formal approval by the House of Representatives. The agricultural fair is a public institution and it is a nonprofit venture. I am in hearty accord with the Senator. In fact, had I known the Senator was to file his amendment this morning, I should have asked permission to join with him as sponsor of it.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to the Senator I should have been very happy to have him as a sponsor of the amendment. In fact, I should be very glad to have him join in it now, if he would like to do so.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should feel it a great privilege, if the Senator will permit my name to go on the amendment.

Mr. BALDWIN. I shall be happy to do that.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I see no reason why the amendment should not be agreed to. There is no question of profit. The amount of taxes taken from agricultural fairs is infinitesimal, the microfraction of a percent of the amount of taxes that come in from other commercial amusements throughout the country. The fairs are educational in effect. I think the Senator's amendment is perfectly in order. I am delighted to join with the Senator as a sponsor of the amendment. If I may I should like to ask the Senator a question; it runs in my mind that the tax, for instance, is imposed in the case of church and religious bazars that are held specifically and solely for the purpose of raising money for charitable purposes. Can the Senator enlighten me on that point?

Mr. BALDWIN. I think that is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That, I think, is a matter that should have some little attention in the future. But, inasmuch as the particular amendment is now before the Senate, I am delighted to join with the Senator in advocating it. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Iowa for his remarks and for his support. I subscribe most heartily and cordially to all he has said.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. I should appreciate it if the Senator from Connecticut will shed some light on several questions which come to one's mind as he reads the joint resolution. Can the Senator state to the Senate which charity has been selected, to which all the net proceeds will be given? If so, can he also give an approximation of the net profits expected to result from the inaugural activities?

Mr. BALDWIN. I am sorry to say that I cannot, because I am not familiar with that particular phase of the matter. I do not know.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator permit me to ask that question of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]?

Mr. BALDWIN. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not familiar with that aspect of the matter. I know nothing of the inaugural committee, in fact, except that I have been asked to present the resolution when and if passed by the House. My general understanding is that the community chests would be the beneficiaries of the total of any receipts over and above the expenditures made by the inaugural committee in Washington, but I apprehend that perhaps there may not be any net receipts over and above expenditures. So far as I am advised, there will not be.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator perhaps agree that if a charity is designated as beneficiary, the name of such charity should be mentioned in the resolution, in order that all other charities that are not to benefit from it may know ahead of time that they need not line up on the right?

Mr. GEORGE. No, I would not offer such an amendment. If some of my distinguished friends on the other side wish to encumber this simple resolution with that sort of amendment, they are quite free to do so, but I have no desire to do that. I should like, however, to call attention to the fact that all agricultural fairs are not conducted by nonprofit organizations. I know of some that are not. Moreover, I call attention to the fact that we are now taxing even church entertainments and fairs. This of course was a wartime tax. There are other admission taxes which should be considered when we have the opportunity to consider this particular excise tax. We certainly would not want to exempt county fairs and leave a tax on charitable and church and religious exhibitions and displays which are held only and solely for the purpose of raising money for the church or for church purposes. I am hopeful at least that if the Senator presses his amendment, it may be rejected, so that we may proceed with the vote on the joint resolution, which otherwise of course will die, because I would not want to go back to the House and ask them to consider relief from a particular admission tax when there are so many excise taxes that need reexamination.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. As I may make a few comments on the joint resolution, with the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I should like to say to my good friend from Georgia that if there is anything which would help kill the resolution, I certainly should support it, because there is a great deal of truth in the old adage that haste makes waste. Certainly the attempt of the Congress to pass this type of legislation will not only be productive of waste but productive also, in my judgment, of an exceedingly bad precedent. The Senator from Georgia in his comments said in effect that if we do not pass the joint resolution today, we shall simply be confronted in the future with the inaugural committee coming before the Congress and asking for an appropriation to make up a deficit. My answer to that prediction of the Senator from Georgia is "So what?" Let them come. Then I think the answer of the Congress of the United States should be, "No appropriation, gentlemen." If a deficit occurs, then the committee should be required to fall back upon the people who are responsible for the situation in which we find ourselves today. If I am correctly informed, the social functions of the inaugural have been underwritten by certain sponsors, particularly business concerns. A typical safeguard has been followed which many of us, in connection with community programs, have followed in our home States, of securing an underwriting of the program in advance. These gala social events of the inaugural have a commercial value and basis, too. The merchants, hotels, and other business establishments will make great profits out of this affair. Hence, as I understand it, many business concerns have agreed to pay any losses that the inaugural committee may suffer. I think it is good business for them to pay such losses, if any, and they and not the taxpayers of the country should be made to pay any deficit.

Thus I repeat my understanding, Mr. President, that the merchants who are somewhat "out on a limb" this morning, because they want to get this tax-exemption resolution agreed to for their own financial benefit, have, in effect, guaranteed the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies so far as the social functions are concerned. I have been associated with some rather large community amusement programs, pageants, and what not, and we have always gone about getting some insurance against possible deficits by way of an underwriting program, so that if a deficit should occur the underwriters would make it up. I see no reason in this instance for relieving the business concerns and other sponsors of these social functions from their underwriting obligations.

I certainly am not one who shares at all the view of the Senator from Georgia, that if a deficit results in this instance, then the Congress of the United States should make it up. Let the underwriters make it up. That is the purpose of having underwriters. They know the risk they run when they underwrite any amusement undertaking. Let us not make it only a form for the underwriters.

Mr. President, I have noticed the prices on some of the tickets issued. They are exorbitant, to put it mildly; they are clearly exorbitant—$10 for a seat with not even a back against which to lean while the circus goes by.

In times past I have introduced proposed legislation, such as Senate bill 2096, in regard to amusement taxes on school functions. In this instance I think some very important values were involved in my bill proposing to allow grade-school and high-school students to obtain some tax relief for their school programs. I see no important value—and I say this quite kindly, Mr. President, in connection with the social features of the inaugural program for which this tax exemption is sought. My remark has nothing to do with the President of the United States; it has to do only with the extravaganza which has developed in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. I see no important value in connection with the social functions of the inaugural celebration which justify our exempting the tickets from taxes. No man on the floor of the Senate has a higher respect for either the President or the Presidency than has the junior Senator from Oregon. But simply because this extravaganza of amusement is connected with the inauguration of the President I do not propose to sit here and vote for the type of resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. President, in a previous Congress I introduced Senate bill 2096. I introduced it because of some practical experience. I introduced it as president of a parent-teacher association in the District of Columbia. I was president of that association last year, and I am president of it again this year. It is the Alice Deal Junior High School Home and School Association. As a result of my experience, as president of that parent-teacher association, I have some understanding, as other parents in this body have, as to the type of problem with which we are confronted in putting on grade-school and high-school entertainments. For example, in our school if we wish to put on a little parent-teacher entertainment in order to raise some money to repair the violins and other instruments used in the little school orchestra or to buy some instruments for children who come from homes which cannot afford to give the children the instruments they need if they are to receive the musical education their talents indicate they are capable of absorbing we must pay a Federal tax on the admission tickets.

I have not been able to receive a hearing on my bill which embodies a fine and sound principle. However, when it comes to the great inaugural celebration Roman circus to be held in Washington, D. C., the assumption appears to be that a resolution can be jammed through the Congress because one side of the aisle thinks it has the votes to exempt from amusement taxes the tickets for that circus.

Now that I have the floor, I wish, at least, to read into the RECORD the substance of my school bill, which I think the parents and the teachers throughout the country will understand involves a great principle of justice and fairness to the children of America. I would that I could elicit at least as much interest in exempting little school programs from amusement taxes as the Senator from Georgia has been able to arouse with great haste in order to protect, apparently, some businessmen who have underwritten this inaugural extravaganza of theirs. Business sponsors who fear they might wake up to the fact that unless they secure the passage of this joint resolution they will have to absorb some taxes and pay a deficit on the social amusements of the inaugural.

My bill provides as follows:

That (a) subchapter (A) of chapter 10 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 1705. Exemption from tax.

"(a) No tax shall be levied under this subchapter with respect to the first $100 in aggregate amount collected in any calendar year from the sale of admissions the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of any high school or elementary school.

"(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to amounts collected, on or after January 1, 1949, for admission."

Mr. President, I serve notice, and I hope my good friends on the Democratic side of the aisle will please take note of it, that I shall reintroduce this school bill in this session of Congress. I hope I can get as much enthusiastic support for the effort to do something to help the boys and girls in grade schools and high schools who find themselves handicapped by the type of amusement tax which the bill seeks to rectify, as is now given to the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia to exempt the dances, shows, parades, and other amusements of the inaugural from amusement taxes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, it is my understanding that there is a fund of $32,000 available for the inauguration ceremonies. Yesterday a friend of mine, from the West, a good Democrat, telephoned me and said he wanted me to get him a box at the ball. It seems that there will be a ball of some kind in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. I telephoned to those in charge and was told that there was no box available. A little later I was called back and told that because of the fact that I was a Senator they had finally found a box, the cost of which was $250. So I wrote out my check for my good friend and sent it over. It seems to me, Mr. President, that with all the boxes sold at $250 apiece, there should be a surplus rather than deficit, and, therefore, in my opinion certainly this measure should not pass.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the question has been raised by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] as to whether my amendment would exempt from tax admissions to country fairs which are run on a profit basis. In answer to that inquiry I will say that the purpose of my amendment is to restore a provision in an earlier act, which reads as follows:

Any admissions to agricultural fairs if no part of the net earnings thereof inures to the benefit of any stockholders or members of the association conducting the same, or admissions to any exhibit, entertainment, or other pay feature conducted by such association as part of any such fair—if the proceeds therefrom are used exclusively for the improvement, maintenance, and operation of such agricultural fairs.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. If I may make just one statement, then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. President, my amendment deals with what are absolutely and completely nonprofit institutions, none of whose net earnings accrue to the benefit of any individual or group. I do not think, Mr. President, that can altogether be said regarding the money collected for the inaugural ceremonies in Washington.

It is perfectly proper that the commercial interests of this city, the hotels, the theaters, and the stores—and they are well within their rights in doing so—should make, as I understand they have made, large contributions to the inaugural fund, because they wanted to encourage people to come to Washington.

It is a perfectly natural action for any community to take, because with the great number of people coming into the community, naturally business will be improved, and I am glad to see it improved. Therefore I submit that it cannot be said that so far as the exemptions proposed to be granted are concerned, they are going to inure to people or organizations not interested in the celebration on a profit basis.

However, Mr. President, so far as the amendment is concerned, it deals only with country fairs and State fairs. When a similar measure was before the Senate on another occasion, I received a letter from my distinguished friend, the Senator from Texas, who asked me if I would not broaden my bill so that it would include the State fair of Texas. The amendment is carefully so framed as to include the State fair of Texas, as it will include all the State fairs in the United States, and the little county fairs and the little town fairs, which are so important in the agricultural sections.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I find myself in sympathy with the motive and purpose of the Senator from Connecticut. I am also heartily in sympathy with the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. I propound an inquiry to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. Would it not be more inclusive and more helpful, rather than singling out any special objective for release from the tax, to offer an amendment to remove from the application of the excise taxes all gatherings and all meetings sponsored and promoted by nonprofit organizations, and stop there? That would include the agricultural fairs, the parent-teachers associations, it would include church gatherings, and the like. The principle is sound, but it should be applied all along the line to nonprofit gatherings, in my judgment. Does the Senator concur?

Mr. BALDWIN. I do concur; yes. My reason for making it applicable merely to county fairs is that it is in line with the bill I originally introduced, and in which I was particularly interested. It affects many local, county, and other fairs; but if the Senator would offer such an amendment, I would support it, because I think the principle is just as applicable to the gatherings he has in mind as to the county fair.

Mr. TOBEY. It would be more inclusive and spread the mantle of justice in a more over-all manner.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Toward the end of last year someone connected with the proposed plans telephoned me and asked what would be the attitude of the Senate Committee on Finance as to an exemption from taxation on these tickets. There were no members of the Committee on Finance in the city except myself, so I asked two questions. First: "Is there a precedent for it?"

I was assured there was. Second, I asked: "Is the enterprise one for profit?"

I was assured that it was not. Whereupon I stated that, speaking only for myself, I would support the legislation necessary; and I shall do so.

I am very much embarrassed in having to speak against the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. I remember very well his zeal last year to have admissions to county fairs excluded from the admissions tax. At that time, when this side of the aisle was in the majority, we took the position that we should not consider these excise taxes piecemeal.

The suggestion of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire emphasizes the necessity for a more orderly approach to excise taxes, and all kinds of taxes that can be had on the floor of the Senate. The Senator would propose an enlargement of this subject to cover all profitless operations. That ramifies in a dozen different directions, and unless we desired to spend a week's time here having a hearing, which should be conducted by the Senate Committee on Finance, we could not possibly reach a sensible conclusion.

Personally, I am in favor of taking the tax off profit-free county fairs, and when the issue is raised in an orderly fashion I shall vote that way. I think I have already assured the Senator from Connecticut, in connection with other remarks, that I would do so. I thought last year, and so expressed myself, that we should approach our taxes on an orderly basis. I thought last year that we should not approach excise taxes on a piecemeal basis. I still feel the same way, and most reluctantly I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield so that I may ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As to the last statement the Senator from Colorado made, I think he will recall that the Democratic members of the Committee on Finance at that time were in hearty accord and agreement with the position the Senator took with respect to piecemeal legislation regarding excise taxes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should have said that when I was speaking before. The Senate Committee on Finance, regardless of the political potencies which might be involved in piecemeal approaches, stood solid on that proposition. I think it is a sound way to proceed. I thought so then, and I think so now, and I say with the greatest reluctance that I shall vote against the amendment, but I shall vote for such an amendment when we can reach it in an orderly fashion.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the particular resolution now offered in and of itself is piecemeal legislation, and my reason for suggesting the amendment is that if we are to have piecemeal legislation, let us make the piece big enough to be worth while, let us make it apply to many other people, who are more entitled to the exemption, in justice and equity, than those exempted in the particular resolution we are discussing.

I stand with the Senator on the question of piecemeal legislation, but I submit we are in that field now. The resolution itself is piecemeal legislation. Let us proceed to enlarge it, and spread the benefits of this piecemeal legislation to people who, I submit, are more entitled to it than are those who will be covered by the resolution.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think there is a very distinct difference between what is embodied in the main resolution and what is embodied in the Senator's amendment. That which is embodied in the main resolution is obviously of an emergent character. As the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia has pointed out, county fairs and their admissions are not yet emergent. They will become so later in the year, and I am quite sure we will be getting at some kind of tax legislation prior to that time. So far as I know, there are not any county fairs in operation at the present time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to make an inquiry of the distinguished Senator from Colorado. Is the tax on these admissions due at this time, or will there be more time to consider the proposed legislation? I have read somewhere that the actual tax returns will not be filed until the end of the year. If that be so, then would it not be possible to let this legislation take a more leisurely process, so that it would not affect these other important matters? Or is it like the President's pay bill, in which we were working against a deadline on January 20?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Obviously, an admission tax either is or is not paid. The time when the question is most relevant is in connection with the current sale of the tickets. It might be that if the tax were not now collected there would be later accountability, but of course the purpose of the proposal is to make the whole subject clear. As I said before, I think this subject deserves a good deal of discussion, and I think it should be considered specifically in connection with our next tax bill. I do not believe that in the future we should approach it on an emergency basis. But, as I have said, the junior Senator from Colorado made inquiry to ascertain whether there was precedent for handling the matter in the way suggested, and whether it was a profitless operation, and he was informed that there was precedent, and it was not intended to be profitable, and that if there were profit it would go to charity. That is why I am supporting the joint resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not true that the tickets have been sold, so that it is now only a question of accounting for tax? They were sold tax-free, were they not?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. And it would be a question of accounting for the tax. Therefore the Senate would have considerable time, if not the whole session, to consider this question and the other questions involved?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would reply to that, that under the circumstances, where there are individuals here who are working gratuitously for this ceremony, it would be grossly unfair to suspend a possible liability against them until some future undetermined time, when we might get around to considering the matter, with our judgment then in doubt.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in response to what my distinguished friend from Colorado has just said, I always have assumed that it was a very fundamental principle of jurisprudence in this land of ours that people are presumed to know the law. They act with that presumption in mind, and we cannot proceed in any orderly fashion on any other basis. When these admissions were fixed and when the whole affair was planned, it must be presumed that the people who were planning it knew that the tickets might be subjected to an admission tax just like the tickets of admission to plays presented by parent-teachers associations, or to the little county and town fairs throughout the land. It does not seem to me that now they can properly come forward and say, "We did not know anything about this tax. It works a great injustice upon us." They should have laid their plans with this particular fact in mind.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The people who are promoting this ceremony had a decision to make: Either to make or not to make their tickets bear taxes. Under past precedent they did not bear taxes. The enterprise is not one for profit. I think they had a fair right to believe that under the past precedents there would be an exemption. In any event they had to make a decision.

The basic question is whether those tickets should be tax free. If they should be tax free then we should not be suspending or deferring possible liabilities. The thing should be decided before the event is over. In view of the past precedents, in view of the fact it is nonprofit enterprise, in view of the fact that if any profit results it goes to charity, I believe we are well justified in granting an exemption here and now.

I also believe that the matter should be more carefully examined in the future so that no one attempting to promote an event of this kind will be apt to get himself into jeopardies which he is not intending to assume.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Are we talking now about amusement taxes?

Mr. BALDWIN. Taxes on county and State fairs.

Mr. CAPEHART. Such taxes come under the heading of amusement taxes, do they not?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wonder if we are not acting possibly on the wrong premise here, because my observation is that half of the people of the United States are not going to be particularly amused or get any enjoyment out of this so-called parade, and maybe for that reason they do not even owe a tax, since to them it would be no amusement.

Mr. BALDWIN. Whether it is amusement or not, I am going to enjoy it, within limitations. I plan to go to the inaugural ball. I plan to see the inaugural parade. After all, this is an American institution. We are inaugurating a President of the United States, who is our President, and I am going to join in the fun. I will admit that under different circumstances there might have been a little more hilarity on my part [laughter], but nevertheless I think that we ought to take part in it, and we ought to enjoy it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then the Senator does think it comes under the category of amusement?

Mr. BALDWIN. It is a great American institution.

Mr. CAPEHART. If it does not come under the category of amusement, then those who take part possibly do not owe a tax under the law. I am not so certain about that. I think we might forget the whole thing and say that it does not come under the heading of amusement, and then those who buy tickets will not have to pay a tax.

Mr. MORSE rose.

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized and has the floor.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have had the floor right along.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut surrendered the floor to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. BALDWIN. I had no intention of doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BALDWIN. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I had no intention of yielding the floor to the Senator from Colorado, Mr. President. I was standing in my place all the time, and had yielded to different Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that the Senator did not yield to the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Colorado asked the Chair for recognition and received it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Oregon may be permitted to waive his right to the floor and defer to our distinguished colleague from Connecticut. The Senator from Oregon can gain the floor almost any time he wants to.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I was going to say that I will be very happy to yield the floor, or yield to the Senator from Connecticut, whichever meets his desire.

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not ask anyone to yield the floor. I claim it in my own right.

Mr. MORSE. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may say for the information of the Senate that under the rules of the Senate no Senator can take the floor and parcel out the time of the Senate to other Members of the body. The rules require that that task be performed by the Chair.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] is recognized.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, addressing myself again to the idea of piecemeal legislation, I agree with what my distinguished friend the Senator from Colorado says that we ought not to have piecemeal legislation in this matter. But I repeat that this is a revenue measure, and the only way I can see to get before the Senate my proposition of exempting from tax, tickets of admission to country fairs or State fairs and local fairs, is to take it up in connection with some revenue bill that comes over from the House, or a bill concerning revenue, such as the pending measure indeed is. Time and time again in the brief period I have been a Member of the Senate, I have seen amendments of this kind tacked onto other revenue measures, and it seemed to me that it was especially appropriate to offer an amendment dealing with the tax on admissions to agricultural fairs to this particular revenue measure.

Mr. President, addressing myself to piecemeal legislation. I agree that matters of this kind should not be dealt with piecemeal, but I submit that the measure before the Senate itself is one dealing with a matter piecemeal. I say again that if we are going into this subject, let us make the piece big enough to be worth while.

On this point, Mr. President, I should like to read to the Senate what the Acting Secretary of the Treasury said in 1947 concerning proposals dealing with exemptions on a piecemeal basis. He said:

> Experience has shown that any exemptions from the admissions tax greatly increase the work of the administrative officers of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, give rise to difficult administrative problems, and are expensive to administer. Prior to the general elimination of the exemptions in 1941, collectors' offices were constantly deluged with claims, and the clerical and investigating work incident thereto was tremendous. A substantial number of these claims were found to be unjustified and accordingly denied, with resultant dissatisfaction and ill-feeling. In administering the law, as it existed prior to 1941, the Bureau found it necessary to obtain increasingly detailed information from organizations claiming exemption in order to cope with a constantly growing number of flagrant abuses. Furthermore, it is difficult, if not impossible, to provide any exemptions from the admissions tax which will operate equitably and without undue controversy. Enactment of the proposed bills would be a discrimination against, and lead to demands for exemptions by other institutions and organizations having equally meritorious claims to preferential treatment.

Mr. President, all of that statement applies to this particular measure. If we adopt it, it will do everything that the Acting Secretary, Mr. Wiggins, in 1947, said it would do. But if we are going to get into that field, let us make it a broad field, let us deal with other exemptions, which, as I have said before, are more equitable and deserving than I consider to be the particular one provided for in the pending measure.

I read further, Mr. President, from the opinion of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Wiggins:

Under these circumstances the Treasury Department would view as undesirable, the enactment of any legislation granting exemptions from the admissions tax. The position of this Department is in harmony with the conclusion reached by the Congress in 1941 when, after a study of the specific problem, it eliminated all such exemptions. It is to be noted that this congressional decision to deny exemptions has been consistently followed since 1941 on the several occasions that the question has been raised.

Mr. President, in this resolution we propose to abandon that point of view. We propose to go ahead on another basis. If we are going to abandon it, if we are going to give it up, if we are going ahead on another basis, why not include this exemption for agricultural fairs?

I know of no more wholesome thing in our whole land than a county fair. Women work for weeks, and bring the results of their arts, which they have dedeveloped in the kitchen, to the fair. The 4–H Clubs and all other organizations concerned with agriculture bring to the exhibitions their cattle, poultry, dresses, and other things which they have to exhibit. They look forward to it for weeks and months, and work long after dark to accomplish results.

Consider the admissions to the inaugural ball alone. Assume that 10,000 people attended that affair. Twenty thousand dollars would go into the Federal Treasury. Think how much detail there is in collecting the small pittance involved in the admission tax on county fairs and local and State fairs across the land. It seems to me that equity and justice cry out for the adoption of this amendment to the joint resolution.

I submit again that if in the Senate we are going into the field of exemptions now is the time to adopt this amendment exempting county fairs, while we are passing this joint resolution, if indeed it is to be passed. In the Senate we have an opportunity to act on revenue measures only as they come over from the House.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in the first place, let me say that the position of the junior Senator from Oregon would not be one whit different if a Republican President were being inaugurated and the same request from tax exemptions of inaugural dances and shows were being made from the Republican side of the aisle.

We are dealing with a resolution which cannot be justified in principle. I point out that the report on the inauguration in 1932 shows that—

A high light in the Inaugural Committee work was the handsome profit of slightly more than $60,000 over outlay.

The committee made money on the inauguration in 1932. It certainly should make money at the one this year and still pay amusement taxes on the purely entertainment features of the affair.

Mr. President, it is almost impossible to buy an inaugural ticket today. This resolution is an attempt to give the businessmen of this area complete assurance of relief from their responsibility of underwriting the amusement features of it. If the project should run into a deficit, then let us cross that bridge when we come to it. Let us go into the facts surrounding the deficit at that time. Let us find out why a deficit was incurred. I see no reason why we should stand here today and in behalf of the taxpayers of the United States pass a tax-exemption resolution which, in the last analysis, would help certain commercial interests so as to give them all the commercial gravy from the inauguration, and remove any risk that they run in collecting that gravy.

Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Colorado does not have much force with me when he talks about the fact that we are confronted with an emergent situation. He argues, therefore, that we ought to act in this emergent situation now by passing the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado. He argues further that later during the session we should take up through the Committee on Finance, questions of tax exemption involved in county fairs, parent-teachers' associations, schoolhouse amusements, and excise taxes generally. For 2 years he was chairman of the Committee on Finance, when there was an opportunity to come forward with a real tax-revision program. During that 2-year period there were emergencies connected with each one of the groups interested in protection from some of the exorbitant and unjust excise taxes. Where was the argument of emergency then? Why was there not a tax-revision program coming through from this side of the aisle? Why did not the Senator from Colorado argue, then, in support of meeting the emergency situation created by unfair excise taxes? No; we dealt primarily with a tax-reduction program and not an overhauling of the tax structure to eliminate inequities which need to be eliminated if we are to give encouragement to venture dollars so that we can increase our production. We had 2 years to offer revision of unfair amusement and excise taxes, but we did not do it as a party on this side of the aisle.

I am not moved by the argument of the Senator from Colorado that in connection with this resolution we are dealing with what he considers to be an emergency. For 2 years past we ought to have been dealing with the emergency of a complete overhauling of the tax structure of the country.

I think the time has come to stop giving the kind of emergent treatment proposed by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado in this resolution especially when we recognize that, after all, it is bottomed pretty much on the basis of political pressure. Mr. President, I believe that the joint resolution should be defeated and that we ought to send the whole problem back to to the Committee on Finance to come forward with a complete overhauling of the entire tax structure.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have been very much impressed, contrary to the views of my distinguished friend from Oregon, with the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. I am wholeheartedly in favor of the general proposition of exempting county fairs and organizations of that kind from the tax to which reference is made. However, at this moment we have very little opportunity for real consideration. Many new Members of this body were not in the Eightieth Congress. It seems to me decidedly unwise at this time to step forward with hasty action with respect to the exemption of county fairs. I am impressed with the idea that while we should consider the question, it should be done in an orderly fashion, at a proper time. I concur with the Senator from Colorado in that respect.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. This is a revenue measure coming over from the House of Representatives. How can we be assured that this question can ever be considered on the floor of the Senate? It was not considered in the past 2 years, and I think perhaps for a very good reason. I know how the distinguished Senator from Colorado, as chairman of the Finance Committee, worked. This is the one opportunity that I, as a Senator from Connecticut, have to submit a proposal of this kind. I originally introduced a bill covering the particular objective. This is the one opportunity of which I can be assured that the question will be considered on the floor of the Senate. That is why I am urging my amendment.

Is not the amendment perfectly consistent with the pending measure? In the joint resolution we are dealing with the question of exemptions. The amendment deals with the question of exemptions. In the joint resolution we are dealing with the question of exemptions from admission taxes. The amendment deals with an exemption from an admission tax. It seems to me that it is most appropriate for this amendment to be considered at this time. I do not like to find myself in disagreement with my distinguished friend from Missouri, but I think he is fundamentally mistaken.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have not examined the law on the question whether or not it is possible in the Senate to propose an exemption from a revenue measure; but it seems to me that in all probability this body will have ample opportunity, in the consideration of various revenue proposals which will doubtless be made, for the consideration of this particular question. The President of the United States has advocated that Congress increase revenues by approximately $4,000,000,000. No doubt a revenue proposal will in time be placed before the Senate. In view of the statement of the President of the United States in his state of the Union message, it is inconceivable to me that the subject of revenue will not come before the Congress many times. In all probability, regardless of whether an exemption measure can or cannot be originated in the Senate—and as to that I express no opinion at this moment—it is to be expected that the Senator from Connecticut will have opportunity to bring his proposal before the current session of Congress. It is almost inconceivable to me that such an opportunity will not be afforded.

Mr. President, to my mind, there is something in this question far more fundamental than anything that has been mentioned here today or, at any rate, anything I have heard. It seems to me that this proposal illustrates the fact that there are people—and, alas, I think there are probably too many of them—who undertake to take into their own hands matters which are already matters of law in the United States statutes. At the time when these ceremonies were promoted the gentlemen of the city of Washington who promoted them had the statute of the United States before them and they realized that there was a liability for the admissions tax to which reference has been made. With that in mind, realizing the fact that under the law the purchasers of those tickets were responsible for the payment of the tax, what did they do? The testimony we receive today from the distinguished Senator from Colorado is that instead of waiting until they found out whether legislative approval could be had they went to one eminent Member of the Senate, eminent lawyer that he is, chairman of the committee that he was—but, after all, he is but one Member of the United States Senate, out of the 531 Members of the United States Congress—to find out whether they might violate the law with impunity. It seems to me, Mr. President, that every Member of the Congress of the United States should wait until the law has been changed before he relies upon a change in the law in the future.

So it seems to me that when the distinguished Senator from Georgia and other Senators today advocate that now we give an exemption to these gentlemen for something as to which they knew they were violating the law, they should wait until the whole subject matter is presented to us.

Mr. President, so far as this particular matter is concerned, there is no special equity in connection with the question of violation of the law. Of course, there will be an inauguration ceremony, and I trust that it will be dignified and beautiful and will inspire in the people of our Nation greater admiration for our Government. I trust that the sentiments expressed on that occasion will not be ignoble ones. Indeed, Mr. President, let me take this opportunity to ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a very beautiful statement which appeared in the Washington Star of day before yesterday. The statement is by the former Chaplain of the Senate, the Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., Litt. D., and it is entitled "Making the Inauguration an Altar—Sees America Speaking to the World for Freedom While Presidential Induction Proceeds."

Mr. President, I quote only a few words from those eloquent remarks by Dr. Harris. He says:

> The open Bible and the solemn oath before God are the inaugural symbols that the liberties which we broadcast as our credo and of which we are but trustees is essentially and inherently a spiritual concept.

Further on he says:

> A free society can be kept only as it maintains its rootage in the religious soil from which it sprang, drawing its strength from spiritual springs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks the entire statement by Dr. Harris in Sunday's Washington Star be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I was about to elaborate somewhat on my statement that no special equity is involved in this matter.

In the first place, there is no equity, because of the fact that the citizens committee, laudable though their purpose may have been, proceeded in known violation of a law as spread upon the statute books.

In the second place, there is nothing particularly ennobling in some of the ceremonies, at any rate, which are to occur. I am not criticizing them; I do not say they are necessarily out of place. But certainly I do not wish this RECORD to go down to future generations without contradiction of the remark and recital of House Joint Resolution 85 that the amounts paid for admission tickets on the occasion of the inauguration of President-elect in January 1949 constitute payments for tickets which will enable people to hear the address of the President and to see the President take the solemn oath to which Dr. Harris has referred. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, so far as I know, there is no admission charge for seeing the inaugural ceremony, beautiful as I trust it will be, adjacent to where we are today. The charges are not to be made for the inaugural ceremony at all. The hundreds or perhaps thousands of persons who will be permitted to be within the sound of the President's voice on that occasion and who will see the beautiful inaugural ceremony are not the ones who will pay for the particular privileges to which reference has been made. So far as I know, the persons who are paying for tickets are divided into three classes. Of course there may be others as to whom I am not informed.

First, there is the great multitude of people who are to pay for the seats along the route of the parade. Mr. President, I have no objection to their having those seats. I have no objection to having the parade. There may be some question in the minds of some persons as to whether the parade will be of appropriate dignity, as to whether it will extend itself into some rather undignified features; but I am not basing my proposition upon that point.

I say that the first category of persons who are paying for these tickets is made up of persons who will look at the parade. They will not see the inaugural ceremonies. They will see the cavalcade go down the street, among which will be the float from my own State, and among which will be the calliope which I understand will bring up the rear of the procession. Those persons constitute the first class of the ones to whom this tax will apply.

The second class, as I understand, will be made up of the persons who will be present at the inaugural ball. I have no criticism of the inaugural ball; I think it is appropriate, and doubtless it will be most beautiful and will be an occasion to be long remembered by those who will be privileged to participate therein. But, after all, it is not a part of the solemn, beautiful ceremonies which will take place here at the Capitol, when the President will rededicate himself to the patriotic duty of his great office.

The third category, so far as I know, of persons who will buy admission tickets is made up of those who will buy tickets of admission to the other portion of the ceremony, so-called, and that is the so-called gala which is to take place on the night before the inauguration. I observe in this morning's Washington Post a picture of a young lady, and it is entitled "Movie Actress Jane Powell, in Washington, Runs Over the Songs She Will Sing at the Inaugural Gala Wednesday Evening."

Mr. President, I have read in the newspapers from day to day the list of artists who will perform on that stage the night of the gala enterprise. I have no criticism of it, but I do not want this RECORD to convey to future generations the idea that in acting on this matter we are passing solely on the question of the exemption from taxation of tickets of admission to the beautiful inaugural ceremony. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, these tickets are tickets to the parade and to the inaugural ball and to the gala which will take place on Wednesday night; and they have about them no particular solemnity which would entitle them to exemption from this particular tax under the law.

So, Mr. President, not that I am opposed to the matter on its merits, but because I think this is not a good time to bring it up, I am opposed to the amendment presented by my good friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and likewise I am opposed to the joint resolution presented by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I am opposed because of the fact that if the joint resolution were passed by the Congress, it would encourage people to take steps in defiance of law without having first secured the consent of the legislative body; and I am opposed, in the second place, because there is no special solemnity attaching to the ceremonies or events to which the tickets apply, such as would entitle the purchasers of those tickets to exemption from a law now on the statute books of the United States.

[From the Washington Sunday Star of January 16, 1949]

SPIRES OF THE SPIRIT—MAKING THE INAUGURAL AN ALTAR—SEES AMERICA SPEAKING TO THE WORLD FOR FREEDOM WHILE PRESIDENTIAL INDUCTION PROCEEDS

(By the Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., Litt. D.)

All the world has tickets for the inaugural of the thirty-second President of the United States on this coming Thursday. All nations will be gathered before the canopied white stand in front of the dazzling dome, shrine of a people's devotion. On January 20 more people will hear the voice of one man than ever before in history.

To the kingdom of the spoken word there is now no frontier. In the commerce of the air waves, blocked with verbal traffic, the most potent voice resounding this day around a troubled world is the Voice of America. When one man out of 150,000,000 kisses the Holy Book and says: "I solemnly swear" he but lends his voice to a united Nation pledging undying devotion and eternal vigilance for all that America means at its best. Thank God that that stand so near the legislative halls of freedom is not a balcony where a dictator with clenched fists threatens and thunders. It is, rather, a pulpit where a servant of the Most High and of the people proclaims anew America's creed and bows in reverence before the Judge of all the Earth. As the silver trumpets of democracy are sounding, America will give utterance to its faith in the hearing of the greatest concourse earth has known. On this day when the world—a tragic part of it in physical or mental shackles—stops to listen, this is what it will hear the Voice of America saying:

"We believe God created man free and endowed him with certain inalienable rights and that no government has any right except that which is given it by the consent of the governed, and that the State is made for man, man the individual, and not man for the state. We believe that the future of our Nation and of the world depends on the spread of these ideas everywhere."

This is the authentic voice of earth's mightiest nation that desires nothing for herself that she does not covet for the whole world. It says to the emerging peoples of the east, yearning for freedom, "America understands your passion to be your own masters; America is on your side. We have forever renounced all desire to become the imperial ruler of subject peoples. We want you to see that our Revolution for Independence was a much more tremendous convulsion than the Russian revolution. We come to you not with the regimentation of Lenin, but with the emancipation of Lincoln."

The open Bible and the solemn oath before God are the inaugural symbols that the liberty which we broadcast as our credo and of which we are but trustees is essentially and inherently a spiritual concept. In our prayer for America there must ever be a petition: "Make me big enough to be an American; purge me from conceptions too narrow for freedom." But another petition must always be added: "Make me good enough for freedom."

Undisciplined people never can keep their freedom. Their very liberty will corrupt them. They become their own despots. Lust, liquor, and license will eat out the inner fiber of any nation. These vices threaten a free nation even more than they do a slave state where private lives are regulated by external tyranny. A free society can be kept only as it maintains its rootage in the religious soil from which it sprang, drawing its strength from spiritual springs.

This means that the Voice of America must not just be against something. It must be made crystal clear, so that stirring millions around the world will know that America is for something and take courage. We must broadcast to a bewildered world exactly what that something is. It is liberty that cannot be bartered for security. It is freedom that will not sell its crown jewels for some collectivist Utopia. It is strength that never bullies the weak. It is liberty under God.

Rededication to this will consecrate the inaugural platform as a national altar set up where the whole world may see an America conscious of the awe-inspiring role these fearful days are thrusting upon her, sanctifying her might, moral and material, to something bigger than her own destiny.

As an atom bomb-conscious humanity hangs breathless on what the next 4 years may hold for weal or woe, America will be called to give much. But may she be reminded, as with the rest of the world, she faces the blessing or the curse, life or death, that there is one supreme sacrifice God requires of those to whom much has been given:

"Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of the adoption of my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will count the number of Senators joining in the request for the yeas and nays. [After a pause.] The clerk reports that there is not a sufficient second.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Hickenlooper | Miller |
| Anderson | Hill | Millikin |
| Baldwin | Hoey | Morse |
| Barkley | Holland | Mundt |
| Brewster | Humphrey | Murray |

| George | McKellar | Vandenberg |
| Gillette | McMahon | Watkins |
| Green | Magnuson | Wherry |
| Gurney | Malone | Wiley |
| Hayden | Martin | Williams |
| Hendrickson | Maybank | Young |

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BALDWIN and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the roll is called, I wish to have a word to say. Certain of the distinguished Senators on the other side of the aisle have referred to the joint resolution as having been introduced by myself. The truth is the resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives. It was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee. That committee recommended its passage. Yesterday it was passed by the House, and in order to expedite its consideration in the Senate, I merely asked the committee if there was objection to bringing it to the floor without reference to a committee. The joint resolution conforms to what has been done on other inaugural occasions, when there was an admission tax applicable to the sale of certain seats and to the admission to certain events in connection with inaugural ceremonies. I do not quarrel with anyone who objects to the tax on agricultural fairs or religious entertainments or shows put on by high schools and other schools. In fact, there are many excise taxes which undoubtedly ought to be lowered, and some of which ought to be entirely eliminated. But I think it is all out of place to offer an amendment to a joint resolution of this kind, which has taken its regular course, and for which I am not responsible. I want to assure my friend from Connecticut that I have no seat on the Avenue and do not expect to buy one; I am not going to the inaugural ball; and I am even going to skip the gala. Those are the only three things for which an admission tax is paid.

Let me assure my friends on the other side that the joint resolution is not a Democratic measure. One would think it was. I am a bit disturbed that Senators on the other side of the aisle are wasting their ammunition on a thing of this kind. I am a bit concerned that they do not wait until something more momentous arises and then go into action on it. The joint resolution is not a Democratic measure, it is not a partisan measure. The Inaugural Committee was set up when the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. Brooks, whom we all remember with great affection, was chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration. He was chairman of the Inaugural Committee. There were two Republicans upon the committee and but one Democrat. Later, the events of November having transpired, there was a reorganization of the Senate and of the Committee on Rules and Administration. The distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has become chairman of the Inaugural Committee. The committee of course necessarily has certain expenses. In the first place it relies primarily on appropriations made by the Congress to take care of those expenses. But there are numerous expenses incident to the carrying on of proper ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of a President, so the Inaugural Committee does the best it can. Whether it secured a committee of businessmen here to underwrite the expenses in part or not, I care nothing about that. All I know is that the Inaugural Committee itself is asking for the exemption on the three particular tickets sold by it or under its authority, on which they desire to be relieved of the admission tax. Undoubtedly admissions to farm or agricultural fairs ought to be relieved; and undoubtedly admissions to religious and church entertainments ought to be relieved. I have no doubt they will be relieved. I can assure my distinguished friend from Connecticut and all other Senators that, before the year is out, there certainly will be an opportunity to consider such admission taxes as have been here discussed.

The joint resolution is not a proposal to repeal the law; it is not a proposal to enact permanent legislation. It is simply a proposal to exempt from admission taxes the sales made in the month of January for a particular and limited occasion; that is all. If it were a proposal to relieve for all time all sorts of tickets from the admission tax, there might, of course, be a good reason for amending the law permanently so as to take care of county fairs and agricultural fairs, and to take care of religious and school entertainments. I share all the noble sentiments of my friends on the other side of the aisle with respect to these great entertainments. I am anxious to see the tax on such admissions removed, but why not wait until we have the opportunity of doing that?

Lest I should lose a single vote, I repeat that the pending joint resolution is not mine. It is House Joint Resolution 85. I presume that perhaps the distinguished chairman of the House committee may have introduced it, but it has not been introduced in the Senate. It is simply here because it was passed by the House.

I am not opposed, certainly, to lifting many of the excise taxes. I am not opposed to reducing a great many of them, if it is possible to do so. Of course, it is a bit difficult, if we are called upon to raise an additional $4,000,000,000 from taxes, to begin exempting various things, but I am quite sure that that would not apply to a reconsideration of certain of the excise taxes, particularly excises of the kind here in question.

I ask my friends in the Senate to please bear in mind that the joint resolution is not an offer to repeal an existing law. It merely exempts from the payment of tax the particular admission tickets on a single, particular occasion; that is all. It is in conformity with precedent heretofore established. The House having passed the joint resolution, I thought I might with some degree of immunity at least bring it before the Senate and ask that it be acted upon without unnecessary delay. So, Mr. President, I express the hope that the Senate will reject the pending amendment or any other amendment that may be offered, however meritorious, to the end that the joint resolution may here be voted up or voted down, and let the House be advised.

I repeat that all my information is to the effect that the Inaugural Committee, mindful of the precedents heretofore set, advised the people who were selling the tickets that perhaps it would not be necessary to collect taxes because the Congress would certainly relieve them. But although that was unwarranted and may be subject to certain criticism, it nevertheless is the fact that tickets already sold and delivered, less the tax, will subject the Inaugural Committee itself to the payment of such tax as may be due the Treasury, unless Congress intervenes to relieve them of the tax.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will reject the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have already taken considerable time of the Senate in order to debate this amendment, but I want to express my appreciation for the patience of my colleagues——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Chair how many times a Senator can speak on the same amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules, a Senator can speak twice on the same amendment on the same day.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I might add that I am a bit unhappy to find myself opposed to so distinguished a Senator as is the senior Senator from Georgia. I understand the situation in which he finds himself. The joint resolution came over from the House. It is not the Senator's resolution, but it relates to a matter which is in the purview of the Finance Committee, and it is the Senator's duty to support the resolution on the floor of the Senate.

Let me say, Mr. President, that I have not any particular quarrel with the joint resolution itself. I think I shall vote against it, but I do not feel so violently opposed, perhaps, as do some other Senators with regard to it. However, under the Constitution, we in the Senate have only very infrequent opportunities to consider revenue measures. We must wait for such a measure to come over from the House. In the first session of the Eightieth Congress I introduced a bill which would have exempted from the tax admissions to agricultural fairs. Unfortunately, the committee did not act upon it, and, I think, for good and sufficient reasons. There is now before the Senate the subject of exempting from the tax admission tickets in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. It happens that this particular matter concerns itself with the exemption of taxation on admissions to the various functions for which fees are charged in connection with the inaugural ceremonies.

As has been ably pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], there is no charge to be paid by persons who wish to view the administration of the Presidential oath, which is, after all, the only essential part of the entire ceremony. I think it is perhaps appropriate that, surrounding that ceremony, for a period of time, there should be other gala occasions. Those are essential occasions for the pleasure, amusement, and celebration of the people, and they are particularly appropriate to the tax. If they are to be exempted, then it seems to me, Mr. President, there are other exemptions which, in justness and fairness, should be granted. I can think of no single one which is more meritorious to receive an exemption from the tax than admissions to agricultural fairs. My amendment is very carefully drawn so that it deals exclusively with those fairs from which no one derives any profit, either monetary or otherwise, except the profit which is shared in common with every man, woman, and child interested in agriculture, which includes almost everyone in the State of Connecticut, and I think it is true of everyone in the other 47 States.

So I say, Mr. President, in the first place, that this amendment is an appropriate amendment, and that in justness and fairness it should be adopted. I urge that the Senate adopt my amendment.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia says that this is not a Democratic measure. If he says it is not, I am sure it is not. I think it is fair to say that it is part of the Democratic program in this Congress. That, Mr. President, leads me to say a few words regarding that program.

Last summer the President of the United States called the Republican Eightieth Congress back for an extra session and put before it a list of 29 measures, all of them far-reaching and highly controversial measures, involving fundamental changes in the American way of life and costs to taxpayers running into billions of dollars. In calling the Congress back the President said that it could pass all of the measures recommended within 15 days if it so desired.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, at this point, a list of those 29 measures proposed by the President at that time.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Reestablishment of an excess-profits tax.
2. Restoration of consumer credit control.
3. Greater authority for Federal Reserve Board to regulate bank credit.
4. Authority to regulate commodity exchange speculation.
5. Authority for allocation and inventory control of scarce commodities.
6. Strengthening of rent controls, and extra appropriations for enforcement.
7. Stand-by rationing authority.
8. Price control authority.
9. Wage control authority.
10. Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill.
11. Federal aid to education.
12. Increase of minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.
13. Fifty-percent increase in old-age pensions, lowering of eligibility age for women from 65 to 60, extension of social security to all not covered now.

14. Amendment of Displaced Persons Act.

15. A United States Government loan for construction of United Nations headquarters.

16. Senate ratification of an international wheat agreement.

17. Extra appropriations for a TVA steam plant and other power projects and removal of certain limitations from the law.

18. Revision of Federal pay schedules.

19. Anti-poll-tax bill.

20. Antilynch bill.

21. FEPC bill.

22. Compulsory health insurance.

23. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, and its replacement with another Truman-endorsed labor-management relations law.

24. Additional farm legislation.

25. Additional reciprocal trade agreements legislation.

26. Additional antitrust legislation.

27. Universal military training.

28. A national science foundation.

29. Approval of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I think it is interesting to recall what the President said at that time, because today happens to be the fifteenth day of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress, which is under Democratic control. Here is the record of that Congress, in which those who like may take such pride as they feel.

First. A bill has been passed increasing the pay of the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House, giving each of them a generous tax-free allowance.

Second. A bill has been passed giving Government employees a 4-day inaugural holiday.

Third. The House has made a change in its rules which is hailed by the Democrats as a liberal measure, but which, it seems to me, literally takes us back to Cannonism.

Fourth. The House has passed, and we in the Senate are now asked at once to pass, a bill exempting from the Federal admissions tax tickets for the inaugural functions.

Mr. President, that is all; that is the record of the Democrat leadership to date. Those four items of legislation have been brought to our attention by the leadership on the other side of the aisle.

I wish to make just a few observations, Mr. President, about the achievements of this leadership in the past 15 days.

The bill to raise the President's pay has a direct bearing on the late election campaign. In that campaign the President and others denounced the Republican tax reduction law because they said it favored the rich. Yet I notice that taxes on high incomes are so severe that in order to raise the President's salary it is necessary to adopt the subterfuge of a tax-free expense account. No private person of wealth of course has any such easy escape from taxation.

Another bill affecting taxes is also slated today by the Democratic leadership. It is this measure to exempt from the Federal admissions tax tickets to the inaugural parade, the inaugural ball, and the gala concert.

It is intimated by high authority that the purpose is to bail out the Inaugural Committee from a loss which they may otherwise take on account of having sold these tickets without including the tax.

Of course, Mr. President, no privately run festival, as has been several times said already, would escape such a loss even if the private operator went into bankruptcy. Community and charitable events throughout the Nation do not escape these Federal excise taxes, but the pending joint resolution, to exempt these particular tickets from taxes, illustrates the principle that whenever the Federal Government engages in an activity, a request is quickly made that the Government itself be relieved from the burden of taxes.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I should like to say that the first 15 days under the Democratic Eighty-first Congress achieved a magnificent record, a record of not passing the program which the President said the Republicans could have passed in a similar period, but simply passed bills raising taxes for Democratic officeholders, exempting Federal officials from the payment of taxes, and exempting a Democratic-controlled festivity from the payment of excise taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], who is absent on official business, would vote "nay," if present.

I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is attending the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of Hon. Elbert N. Carvel as Governor of the State of Delaware and Hon. Alexis I. Dupont Bayard as Lieutenant Governor of the State of Delaware, and is therefore necessarily absent. If present, the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent, would vote "nay," if present.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. BALDWIN's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I send to the desk certain amendments which I now offer, and ask that reading of them be temporarily deferred, so that I may explain them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reading of the amendments will be temporarily deferred.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me say that I heartily agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] when he says that it would be better if we would not amend the joint resolution, but could vote it up or down on its merits—and I do not think it has any merits in its unamended form.

However, the rules under which we operate make it impossible for a Senator to introduce tax legislation. For that reason the only method by which I can bring the matters I have in mind before the Senate is to offer them as amendments to tax legislation which comes from the House to the Senate. Such is the situation today. Were I not to introduce these two amendments today, it is entirely possible that the opportunity might not again arise during this session of the Congress. For that reason I feel I have no alternative but to offer my amendments to the joint resolution which is today before the Senate.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take much of the Senate's time today. I feel that a mere statement of the purpose of the amendments will be the best argument for them.

First, is my amendment to remove the tax on cooking stoves. At the present time a young couple who marries and buys a stove on which to cook their meals must pay a "luxury" tax on the stove. A 20-percent luxury tax on an item which is as necessary in every home as a cooking stove is ridiculous and should be removed.

My second amendment is to remove the tax on oils, creams, and powders that are necessarily used on babies. This, in my opinion, is the most preposterous of all so-called luxury taxes. Any doctor will say that the use of oil and powder on a baby is a necessity for the comfort and health of the baby—yet, these items are placed in the "luxury" class and taxed 20 percent.

In view of the Democrats' professed interest in a poor-man's tax bill, it seems to be unusual and out of line with this professed interest that the majority party should now sponsor a bill to exempt from tax the tickets to the inaugural ball and other inaugural activities. I cannot understand the attitude that going to the gala night or paying $20 for tickets to the inaugural ball is a necessity, but it is a luxury for a family to have a baby. While I am a bachelor and cannot speak with authority on the subject, I understand that a baby is not a luxury.

A vote against my amendment to exempt these toilet articles from the 20-percent luxury tax is, in effect, saying to the young mother who is at home taking care of her baby that she is being taxed for that luxury. I am sure the mother who is obliged to stay at home powdering and applying oil to her baby's bottom does not feel that it is any luxury and would never be able to understand why $20 tickets to attend a dance could be considered in the category of a necessity.

So I urge at this time, Mr. President, that the Senate adopt my amendments—one exempting from taxation the stoves which young married couples must buy on which to do their cooking; and the other exempting from taxation toilet articles which are used in the care of babies, on the theory that such products are necessary to the health and welfare of the people of this country, whereas tickets to the inaugural festivities are obviously luxuries.

Mr. President, on my amendments I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendments read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add a new section as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Section 2402 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to excise tax on toilet preparations) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "The tax imposed by this section shall not be applicable with respect to any substance, article, or preparation which is used or applied, or intended to be used or applied, on babies."

(b) Section 3406 (a) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the excise tax imposed upon electric, gas, or oil appliances) is amended by striking out "electric, gas, or oil appliances of the type used for cooking, warming, or keeping warm food or beverages for consumption on the premises;".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective on and after the first day of the first month following the date of enactment of this joint resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wanted to have the amendments read for the information and edification of the Senate and the country. I am ready for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll on the amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY].

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is attending the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of Hon. Elbert N. Carvel as Governor of the State of Delaware and Hon. Alexis I. Dupont Bayard as Lieutenant Governor of the State of Delaware, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent because of illness.

So Mr. MCCARTHY's amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. MORSE and Mr. BALDWIN asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I should like to address myself briefly to the joint resolution itself.

We have just voted against the amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], and I, like any other American, abide by the result. The majority must have its way.

However, it seems to me that in his argument he pointed out something pertaining to the amendments which is applicable to the joint resolution itself.

His amendments would exempt oils and creams used for the care of babies. They are now taxed as luxuries. We have defeated those amendments. The joint resolution would exempt from taxation as a luxury the admission charges to the gala occasions attendant upon the inauguration.

At this point I should like to read into the RECORD a letter from a young constituent of mine which I inserted in the RECORD last year, because it seems to me to be peculiarly appropriate. It has to do with the luxury tax on baby creams. This comes from a young mother in Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., June 1, 1948.

The Honorable RAYMOND E. BALDWIN,
Senator from Connecticut,

DEAR SIR: The other day I went to the drug store to buy some baby cream for Louis, our year-old son, whose little bottom had gotten all red and irritated. I was charged 47 cents for a jar which holds about 2 ounces. That price is high enough to pay for this product but when I have to give 10 additional cents for a luxury tax for a baby item, that is when I get my dander up.

Since when has it been considered a luxury for the baby to have a sore bottom? It is hard enough trying to raise a family and give America the healthy future sons, daughters, and voters she needs without these additional burdens such as luxury taxes on essential baby items.

I realize that the Government is sustained through taxes and I am willing to give my share, but luxury tax on the essentials of a baby's well-being is going too far. I'm sure there must be many other sources from which this additional money can be obtained and which would feel the pinch much less than the already overburdened budget of today's young parents. What do you think?

Respectfully yours,
(Mrs.) LOUIS W. MINGIONE.

Mr. President, what do we think? First, let me ask myself, What do I think? I think that those who attend the inaugural ceremonies and functions, primarily for their pleasure—and they are perfectly proper functions—can much better afford to pay the tax which the law as it presently stands provides for than can young mothers afford to pay a luxury tax on baby creams and baby oils.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the final passage of the joint resolution. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is attending the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of Hon. Elbert N. Carvel as Governor of the State of Delaware and the Honorable Alexis I. Dupont Bayard as Lieutenant Governor of the State of Delaware, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent because of illness.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Albert J. Loveland, of Iowa, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Public Works, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Peter A. Feringa, Corps of Engineers, to be president and a member of the Mississippi River Commission, under the provisions of law, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

SECRETARY OF STATE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dean G. Acheson to be Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in presenting the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the nomination of Mr. Acheson to be Secretary of State, I wish to pay tribute once more to the collective wisdom which characterized the deliberations and decisions of the Committee on Foreign Relations during my previous chairmanship. I was always pleased at the spirit of harmony and unity with which the committee performed its all-important tasks. During the past 2 years, under the able leadership of the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], this teamwork continued without a break. It is my hope that we shall carry on in the same way in the present Congress.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States, in performing its function of confirmation or rejection of Presidential appointments, exercises a vital power in public affairs. The Constitution wisely provides that the President shall have power "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for." This provision represents one of the checks and balances of the Constitution. It constitutes a limitation upon the power of the Executive to make appointments of high Government officers.

It lays a distinct responsibility upon the Senate. It imposes the duty of advising as well as consenting to Presidential nominations and to the making of treaties. The Senate must bring to the discharge of its duty thorough knowledge as to the qualifications of appointees and of their fitness to perform the duties of their offices. The Constitution lays upon the Senate a solemn obligation.

On January 3, 1949, a great American, George C. Marshall, tendered his resignation as Secretary of State. As Chief of Staff of the United States Army during World War II, he had played a decisive part in the victories in Europe and Japan. At the end of the war he forsook the retirement he so deeply desired and richly deserved to answer his country's call by entering upon the great office of Secretary of State.

When illness overtook him and forced him to resign, President Truman wrote to him as follows:

> Those of us who have had extensive experience in public affairs know full well that there are very few indispensable men. Happily for the continuity of government, there appears from time to time a man of outstanding ability, whose service in one post of responsibility gives him exceptional qualification to discharge other duties of equal moment in a quite different field of activity. You are the exemplification of the type of public servant I have in mind.

These words echoed the feelings of grateful millions of Americans throughout the United States. They felt a great sense of loss.

To fill the position of Secretary of State in these turbulent and troubled times President Truman felt the need of one with an intimate knowledge of the foreign relations of the United States, experienced in the conduct of our foreign policy, versed in the State Department organization, and able to carry on the excellent work of Secretary Marshall with unbroken continuity.

Today the Senate, in pursuance of its authority and in accordance with its judgment and convictions, is called upon to confirm or reject the nomination by President Truman of Mr. Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State of the United States. The office to which he has been nominated is one of lofty functions and high responsibility. The Secretary of State is the adviser to the President in the matter of the relations of the United States with foreign countries. The Constitution lays upon the President responsibility for the conduct of our foreign relations. The Secretary of State is therefore charged with the duty of keeping the President advised of transactions in the realm of foreign relations, which are of such vital concern to the Government of the United States.

The nomination of Mr. Dean Acheson was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the committee held a public hearing on January 13, 1949, and on the following day, January 14, held an executive session of the committee. No Senator made any request that any particular witness should be summoned or heard by the committee.

The fullest opportunity was given to members of the committee to interrogate the nominee, in both the public hearing and in the executive hearing, upon any matter touching on his experience and qualifications, or in anywise relating to the performance of his duties.

In the hearings there was no formal charge filed by anyone against Mr. Acheson's character, ability, or experience. However, in the press there were various statements by individuals of a critical nature. In the hearings, all of these matters were reviewed and investigated. At the end of the hearing, the committee of 13 members unanimously voted to approve the nomination and recommend that the Senate confirm Mr. Acheson as Secretary of State.

The action of the committee was thoroughly nonpartisan, both Republican and Democratic members having voted as a unit in his support.

As a result of the hearing, it was disclosed that Mr. Acheson is 55 years of age; that he is a graduate of Yale University and of the law department of Harvard University. For a period he was law secretary to Mr. Justice Brandeis. For some years he was a member of the law firm of Covington, Burling, Rublee, Acheson & Shorb.

In 1933, Mr. Acheson served as Under Secretary of the Treasury. Later he served, at the request of the Attorney General of the United States, as the chairman of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure, which made its report to Congress in 1940, which report was subsequently of use to the Congress in legislation on the subject of administrative procedure.

Mr. Acheson served as Assistant Secretary of State from 1941 until August 1945. Later he was appointed Under Secretary of State and served in that capacity until July 1947. During that 2-year period, Mr. Acheson was often called upon to fill the role of Acting Secretary of State during the frequent and extended absences of the Secretary from the country.

This fact is worthy of emphasis, Mr. President. The State Department is no new field for Mr. Acheson. Experience has demonstrated that he is thoroughly at home in the Secretary's office. This should be comforting, for we know of the terrible complexity of the many problems from Europe, Korea, Asia, Palestine, the Balkans, Indonesia, the atom bomb, and other problems, with which the Secretary must contend.

It is my belief that Mr. Acheson will make a distinguished record as Secretary of State. He is a man of splendid tact, is familiar with the practices of diplomacy, is the possessor of a virile and aggressive policy in carrying out his conviction of duty and responsibility to his country. He will maintain the foreign policy of the United States with firmness and skill.

Mr. Acheson is a man of unusual ability and his former service in the State Department has given him experience and knowledge of foreign relations which are superb. His nomination was endorsed by former Secretary Cordell Hull, by former Secretary Stettinius, and by former Secretary Byrnes. Mr. Hull said:

> As Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson will display the same type of outstanding ability that has characterized his previous service to the Nation.

Former Secretary of State Byrnes said he "deeply regrets General Marshall's resignation as Secretary of State," and added that Mr. Acheson "is well qualified to serve as Secretary."

Former Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius made favorable comment on Mr. Acheson. He personally appeared before the committee and said:

> I have found Mr. Acheson to be a man of unusual intellectual brilliance, of great personal integrity, forceful, and courageous in meeting problems. He is patient, a tireless worker, and he wins the confidence of those with whom he is associated. He is uniquely qualified for this post from the standpoint of natural endowment, age, temperament, and capacity, and his intimacy and familiarity with foreign affairs as a result of his long experience with such statesmen as Cordell Hull, James Byrnes, and George Marshall in the roles of Assistant Secretary of State, Under Secretary, and Acting Secretary of State.

That statement was made by Mr. Stettinius before the committee.

Former President Hoover made favorable comment on the nomination. He said that Mr. Acheson will bring outstanding ability to the State Department.

Mr. John Foster Dulles, a distinguished Republican, and reputed to have been the adviser of Governor Dewey on foreign relations, and a man who has served with great usefulness and distinction as a representative of the United States on a number of occasions in the United Nations, said:

> I deeply regret Mr. Marshall's resignation as Secretary of State. He contributed great prestige and wisdom in a spirit of loyal devotion to this country. Since his resignation had to be, I am glad that his successor will be one who, as former Under Secretary of State, has gained the experience and demonstrated the capacity to carry forward our foreign policy without interruption or vacillation that, in the present state of affairs, could be disastrous.

Mr. President, it is my view that the Senate should confirm Mr. Acheson by an overwhelming vote. The foreign relations of the United States are of the highest moment. The United States, by reason of its tremendous power in the economic field and its potential strength as a military power, cannot avoid its high responsibility as a world leader. Its efforts to maintain world peace must be maintained and strengthened and advanced. The conduct of its foreign relations calls for the strongest ability in the field of public affairs. Its conduct must be handled with the greatest delicacy and yet with firmness and resolution. Secretary Acheson will firmly and consistently assert and support the foreign policy of the United States in the preservation of its rights and the rights of its citizens and in its determination to secure world peace and freedom from aggression. It is my belief that Mr. Acheson possesses the ability, the character, and the experience which eminently qualify him to perform the gigantic duties of Secretary of State of the United States and as the chief adviser of the President in these troublous and dangerous years.

The Senate should confirm his nomination by an overwhelming vote that will carry a message to the entire world that he has our confidence and support and that he will carry on the foreign policy of the United States with dignity and strength and upon a level above partisan or petty politics—an American policy, of lofty moral leadership in the cause of world peace.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Dean Acheson to become Secretary of State has aroused some anxieties both in and out of the Senate. In view of those anxieties, and in contemplation of the committee action recommending his confirmation, I think the situation requires me to make a very frank statement about the problem which confronts us at the moment when the roll is called.

Mr. President, in discussing any change in State Department management at the present time I wish first to discharge an obligation. As chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee through the active tenure of Secretary Marshall and Under Secretary Lovett, I state for the record that they gave us the fullest possible measure of courtesy, confidence, consideration, and cooperation which could exist between the executive and legislative branches of the Government in respect to the tasks upon which we collaborated in the Eightieth Congress. I am sure this is the unanimous opinion of the committee. I regret to see them leave.

The Senate now faces the responsibility of passing judgment upon their successors. The immediate question before the Senate is the confirmation of Mr. Acheson.

I wish by way of approach, Mr. President, to say for myself that I look upon Presidential appointments to the Cabinet in a somewhat different light than I do other nominations. The reason is obviously inherent in the phrase "official family" by which the Cabinet is usually described. These are the President's intimate personal advisers. This is peculiarly true in respect to the Secretary of State, because this officer necessarily must be the President's sympathetic and responsive agent in the discharge of the President's unavoidable responsibility under the Constitution for the conduct of foreign affairs.

I do not suggest that the Senate's collateral responsibility of confirmation is a mere formality. It is not. But I do respectfully suggest that in the case of the President's official family, his own right of choice carries a strong presumption in its favor; and it is appropriately vetoed by the Senate only for preponderant reasons of ineligibility. I am frank to say that I have found it necessary upon at least one occasion in the past to exercise this veto. I have no quarrel with any Senator who uses such a veto today. I am simply stating for myself that I think the President's choice of an official family, and particularly a Secretary of State, is more his business than it is ours; that it is more his responsibility than it is ours; and, barring clear public policy to the contrary, I personally shall leave this preponderant responsibility where I believe it belongs, and where I can thereafter hold it to strict unpartisan accountability.

But this viewpoint by no means absolves the Senate from faithful examination of any Presidential nominee's credentials. In an unprecedented effort to make the record clear, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the present instance ordered a public hearing, in which Mr. Dean Acheson, the nominee, was asked to face all the objections which had been raised against him. He did so with what I believe even his critics would concede was a complete and commendable candor. I urge a careful reading of this public hearing, the print of which is upon every Senator's desk. I urge it upon all Senators and citizens who have rightly asked that their objections be explored.

With these preliminary observations, I shall state in a few words the factors which bring me to my own personal conclusion in this matter.

Affirmatively—and I believe beyond dispute—it can be said that Mr. Acheson has had a long and distinguished career in the public service, and particularly in foreign affairs. As a result he perhaps has a greater and more reliable familiarity with all the vast detail of our utterly complex current diplomatic problems than any other new Secretary who could be taken either from private citizenship or from another department of the Government. This is so essential a qualification that, taken by itself, it could be conclusive.

Mr. Acheson also has had a large experience in his contacts with Congress, where I believe it will again be generally conceded that he has proved himself to be one of the ablest advocates ever to appear before committees of the Senate and the House. We all are familiar with his habit of complete mastery of subjects which he brings to our attention. My own personal testimony is that in many dealings with him in the State Department, though we have had many differences of opinion, I have always found him reliable, helpful, cooperative, and trustworthy.

During previous tenures in the State Department he has been personally associated with the development of most of the major foreign policies which we are now pursuing. Therefore his appointment as Secretary of State, if it predicts anything, predicts continuity in these national attitudes rather than otherwise. He has so indicated, so far as he personally can, in his testimony before our committee.

But, of course, Mr. President, it is impossible to ask him or any other nominee precisely what policies he will pursue, because he or any other nominee will pursue whatever policies are directed by the President of the United States. Only the President himself can answer that question; and the answer may sometimes be quite impromptu and unpredictable.

We cannot control foreign policy through our action on this or any other nominee. I want to make that plain. Therefore it should be made wholly obvious that we do not underwrite the results, in terms of foreign policy, which will flow from our confirmation of this or any other nominee. But let me significantly add at this point, Mr. President—and this is one of the things which I confess appeals to me—that Mr. Acheson has demonstrated his possession of a rugged character, in that he has demonstrated that if and when, in the course of his public work, he fundamentally disagrees with his President, he knows how to resign.

Let me with equal brevity turn to the arguments which we have heard against the confirmation of Mr. Acheson. In the Hiss matter he sharply discriminates between Alger Hiss, for whom he appears to have had absolutely no responsibility, and Mr. Donald Hiss, his law partner. I believe the records of the House Un-American Activities Committee, plus subsequently pending court actions, justify this discrimination. Nowhere in this connection are there any sinister implications involving Mr. Acheson in any degree that have reached my notice. I may add that the men are legion who held a high opinion of Alger Hiss before the disclosure of events which he admits, to say nothing of events which he denies.

I have asked Mr. Acheson if I might summarize his Hiss attitudes in the following single sentence, and he agrees:

> An assertion of personal friendship for the Hiss brothers; a stanch defense of Donald Hiss; a purpose to leave Alger Hiss to the courts. Total and aggressive hostility to subversion in the State Department.

It is to be noted in this connection that the one and only reason Mr. Acheson's name came into the Hiss discussions was a statement by former Assistant Secretary Adolf Berle regarding a difference of opinion between them long predating any Hiss disclosures. Mr. Acheson categorically denies the Berle thesis, and Mr. Berle voluntarily wired the committee that he thinks Mr. Acheson's nomination should be promptly approved.

This phase of the case inevitably involves collateral issues. I wish to touch upon three or four of the questions with which we have been approached by many persons during the past few days in regard to this problem.

What does Mr. Acheson think about communism? This is what he thinks. I quote his categorical statement to our committee in response to a direct question:

> It is my view that communism as a doctrine is economically fatal to a free society and to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Communism as an aggressive factor in world conquest is fatal to independent governments and to free peoples.

Will Mr. Acheson be a softy in dealing with communism?

Mr. Acheson says—I am quoting from the hearings on Senators' desks:

> The things I read about myself as an appeaser are so incredible that it is difficult for me to believe that even disinterested malevolence could think them up.

That may be an oblique answer. But it is susceptible of but one emphatic interpretation.

Will Mr. Acheson continue State Department house cleaning if and when disloyal personnel is uncovered? Specifically, many Senators who believe in Assistant Secretary John Peurifoy's work in this regard want to know whether he will be allowed freely to carry on, and wish to make sure that he will. The answer seems to be that Peurifoy will be one of the new Secretary's key men.

What does Mr. Acheson think of Moscow? Perhaps the best answer is to turn the question around: What does Moscow think of Mr. Acheson? Upon at least one historic occasion it has officially and violently protested his statements about Russia and complained bitterly of his attitudes.

So much for this phase. The other important, critical phase has related to Mr. Acheson's law-firm connections and its activities. I shall not dwell upon the details because they are completely available in the printed hearings on Senators' desks. Mr. Acheson has made a full disclosure of all his firm's foreign clients and their fees for these labors. In most instances the cases involve litigation in the jurisdiction of the courts and are unrelated to the jurisdiction of the State Department. The exception is the matter of the Polish loan. Mr. Acheson's law firm did legal work for the Polish Government in connection with a $90,000,000 loan when Mr. Acheson was in the State Department and out of the firm. In March of 1947, after President Truman had made sharp statements regarding the Polish Government, the law firm, from which Mr. Acheson had disassociated himself, canceled its connections with the Polish Supply Mission.

In all instances, Mr. Acheson withdrew from his firm, and from any of his firm's emoluments, when he entered upon any of his public tours of duty. Heretofore, however, his name has remained in the firm name. That could involve dubious implications. When I asked him, in the public hearing, whether this might invite misunderstanding, he promptly replied that he is asking his partners to remove his name from the firm name when he becomes Secretary of State. I do not know how we could ask him to do more.

Balancing up all these facts, Mr. President, and remembering the rule which I said I apply for myself in passing upon Cabinet nominees to the President's "official family," I am unable to find any such predominant ineligibility in Mr. Acheson as would warrant me in voting against his confirmation.

But, in fairness to Mr. Acheson, I do not wish to leave the matter in that somewhat negative climate. Regardless of the rule, I think that Mr. Acheson's record and the committee record combine to affirmatively recommend Mr. Acheson's confirmation.

There remains, Mr. President, just one final point to which I shall advert. I have been asked by some Senators whether I strongly opposed the suggested appointment of Mr. Acheson as Administrator for ECA, and, if so, why that same opposition does not persist in respect to the Secretaryship of State. That is a fair question. I am glad to answer.

I did vigorously oppose the suggested appointment of Mr. Acheson as ECA Administrator, for very specific reasons which were no reflection upon him and which have no remote application in the instant case. Senators will remember that in our long debates on ECA the Congress made it abundantly clear that it would insist upon separating rehabilitation economics from diplomatic statecraft in the management of this vast business enterprise. Congress recognized that the State Department would inevitably find itself deeply concerned from time to time with the impact of ECA decisions upon foreign policy, and it wanted to preserve the State Department's wholly legitimate right of consultation. Therefore, adopting a formula recommended by the famous Brookings Institution, it provided in the ECA legislation that the Secretary of State should have a right of consultation with the ECA Administrator whenever he might feel that foreign policy is involved, and that the President should umpire any dispute between them on this score. Having thus fully protected the interests of the State Department, Congress demanded—and was categorically promised by me and other sponsors of the legislation—that the paramount economic phases of ECA should be in the hands of an Administrator who was a proven success in large-scale business management, and who was not related to the State Department. Mr. Acheson was not a large-scale business operator, and he was substantially related to the State Department. Therefore, I did not believe he qualified as ECA Administrator under the particularly narrow and technical specifications which we had drawn for the job. No such specifications are involved in the Secretaryship of State, and that is my point. Indeed, Mr. Acheson's long and intimate connections and experience in the State Department actually become one of his assets in the present instance. His distinguished professional standing as a lawyer establishes a factor of eligibility to be Secretary of State, as Mr. Paul Hoffman's distinguished place in American business conclusively did for him to become Administrator for ECA.

I think the distinction is clear, Mr. President, why Mr. Acheson was not eligible to be appointed Administrator of ECA, but on the face of the record has ample credentials for the consideration of the President in making this personal choice of a Secretary of State.

That concludes what I have to say, Mr. President. I join in the unanimous recommendation of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in which five Republicans are counted with eight Democrats in voting that Mr. Acheson shall be confirmed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I wish to say that it gives me, perhaps I should say, mild pleasure in preparing to vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State. Certainly I am happy to have a civilian as Secretary of State. I always had a high regard for General Marshall as a man and as a general; but I thought his background as a general qualified him for the job of Secretary of State in about the same way that a minister of the gospel is qualified to be Chief of Staff. So I am happy to see that we shall have a civilian Secretary of State again.

Mr. President, I feel very strongly about our foreign policy. There can be little doubt of that, because recently I jumped my party traces and ran for Vice President on the ticket with Henry Wallace, not because I was profoundly disturbed at domestic developments in our country, but because I felt sincerely and honestly that our foreign policy was leading us to disaster, to a world war which no one could win; I felt that we were spending fabulous sums of money only to buy enemies, really. That was the way I saw it, and that is the way I still see it.

I think it is a sad thing, indicative of the hysterical times in which we live, that Mr. Acheson was forced to undergo what amounted to a third degree, practically, before he was recommended for confirmation as Secretary of State. To my mind, it is deplorable that in the executive session of the committee, attention was called to one sentence or one paragraph in which Mr. Acheson took some rather severe blows at the Soviet Union. I say this inasmuch as it is the Soviet Union that we must get along with if we are to have world peace and if we are to avert a world-wide catastrophe. Certainly if I were sending an emissary to try to make peace between myself and a neighbor of mine, with whom I had not been on good terms, I should not deem it to be the best approach for the intermediary to issue a statement saying that he hated my neighbor even more than I did, probably, but nevertheless he would go and try to make peace with him. So I think that is a very bad handicap with which to start Mr. Acheson on a mission of trying to make peace in the world.

I am happy, as I say, to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Dean Acheson, and while I do not seriously expect that it means any fundamental change in our foreign policy, I may still hope; and I am convinced that the people of the country are becoming fed up with our foreign policy as it is presently constituted. Even the dumbest person must realize that we could have spent many times the millions of dollars we have spent on China, helping a corrupt dictator like Chiang Kai-shek, and still have come to the same sad end to which we have come in China.

The situation in Greece goes from bad to worse. I am proud that I opposed it from the beginning. I still oppose it. I read in the newspapers that the guerrillas are beginning to win minor victories in Greece. That is bad, when we have taken the adamant stand over there that we have. I read in the press that there is great unrest in Turkey, that the government there has recently fallen, and that the people are dissatisfied.

Mr. President, all the money we have spent around the world has not won us a friend among the common people. We have set up a few cardboard governments here and there and have maintained them in power simply by the expenditure of vast sums of money for armaments. I cannot but recall that during the last session of Congress there had been in this country a growing sentiment for world government. I am happy to say that I was one of the first to get into and encourage the movement for a world republic. At the last session a resolution was presented on the floor ostensibly to encourage the world government forces, by reason of the pressure which was being put on the Congress to do something about it. The resolution was adopted, and it was made known immediately that the object in adopting it was not to facilitate our reaching agreements with all the nations of the world, but to facilitate our reaching agreements with enemies of Russia for military arrangements against Russia. I think this foreign policy is disastrous. I do not believe the people will permit its continuation much longer.

I have the fear that the American people are going to be forced once again into isolationism. They do not understand clearly what the word implies, but they are tired of spending billions of dollars and having their taxes increased in order to send money around the world—to Great Britain, for her imperialist ventures against the Jews in Palestine; to the Dutch, for their imperialist ventures against the Indonesians; and for all the sad things that are occurring throughout the world, and for which we are getting the blame, indirectly at least. So as I say, I am mildly happy to have an opportunity at least to vote for a civilian for Secretary of State. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is probably the last time I shall have an opportunity to utter a word from this chair before I retire from the membership of the Senate. I would not want the opportunity to pass without a word of commendation of Mr. Dean Acheson as Secretary of State, and a word of congratulation to the President for his appointment. I do not take even these few moments of the Senate's time with the expectation that anything I say may influence any vote, but I do wish to put myself on record as being extremely well pleased over the appointment of Mr. Dean Acheson as Secretary of State. I have over the years associated with him in the legislative way whenever there was any measure before a number of committees of the Senate of which I was a member and before whom he appeared, either in advocacy or in opposition. That includes the Committee on Banking and Currency, dealing with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, and the international economic problems with which Mr. Acheson was called upon to deal and which he was to expound before the committee; in this case, the Committee on Banking and Currency.

While he was associated with the State Department he had many occasions to appear before the Committee on Foreign Relations representing that Department. In all those instances, Mr. Acheson displayed a profound knowledge of the subject which he discussed. He displayed great courtesy, frequently under considerable provocation, in presenting his views to the committee. He displayed great firmness and tenacity in holding to the opinions which he expressed. He is a man of the highest education and culture. It seems to me that he fits the Secretaryship of State, by reason of his environment, his education, his tradition, his background, and his opinions, as well as any man who has been recently appointed to that high station.

I probably feel a very personal admiration for Mr. Acheson, and to that extent what I say in his behalf probably should be discounted, but my association with him, officially and personally, has given me a profound appreciation of his sincerity, his good faith, his unalterable Americanism, his belief in the traditions and the policies and in the Government of the United States, in what we have fought for in time of war and what we are fighting for in time of peace—not only peace in our generation but in all generations if possible; peace not only for our country but for all countries if possible, based upon justice, based upon the right of every people to self-determination and to the enjoyment of those principles of self-government in which we ourselves believe and which we for a century and a half have practiced and tried to perfect.

From all those standpoints, Mr. President, I have a profound feeling that Mr. Acheson will adorn the State Department. Therefore I am in favor of the confirmation of his nomination. From the standpoint of my personal confidence in his integrity, and in his refusal to dissimulate in regard to any profound question of fundamental doctrine related to our Government, I think he is entitled to confirmation; and I predict for him a brilliant record, if he shall be confirmed, as I have no doubt he will be, in the State Department, as the head of that arm of our Government in dealing with all the nations of the world with firmness, with courtesy, and with patience, in the hope that out of all the frustration, chaos, and turmoil which now beset mankind there may come permanent peace throughout the world, for which, in the providence of Almighty God, I hope we may in a large measure be responsible.

For those reasons, Mr. President, I am happy to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Acheson's nomination as Secretary of State.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I have often wondered just how long the American people could put up with all the political shim-sham that is thrown at them.

For 16 years of the New Deal I waited for that saturation point. It never seemed to be reached.

For about 60 days before last November 2 I thought surely the cup would overflow. But it did not.

I was sure that either the ice would break after that state-of-the-Union message on January 7, or that some people might at least be fearful of venturing any farther out on the loaded limb. But I have been wrong.

Now, as we await the Nation's greatest spectacle in this great and beautiful city of Washington, we get a chance to witness another spectacle—of a far more private type, of course.

We now get a chance to see the central figure of the January 20 spectacle eat some of the words he so carelessly cast over the land prior to November 2.

He made a street in New York the scapegoat of his campaign for the Presidency of the United States. It was Wall Street.

On that street, so said the gentleman who will ride at the head of the parade on Thursday, were the wolves who would eat every Little Red Riding Hood in all this land.

There, he said, was where all the pain and misery were cooked up for America.

Dastards. That is what they were, those Wall Streeters. Mr. President, I think Mr. Truman was right. I have been hearing and reading about how the Claytons, the Hisses, the Achesons, and other world bankers, world brokers, and world lawyers have been dabbling in all these international affairs.

When so many of our fine people thought, as did our President, that those Wall Streeters were bad, I decided to find out if all of it were true.

Well, I found out, just as did Mr. Truman, that enough of it was true so that I am going to join right with him in his crusade to keep them out of our Government.

I shall follow the people and our President in voting right out of our Government this Wall Streeter who is a partner to loans to Communist-dominated countries, to Arabian oil interests, and to other international money-making enterprises.

Mr. President, accept my willingness to abide by the bipartisan effort of this Congress and the spirit of cooperation with our President by recording my vote against the confirmation of the nomination of Dean Acheson.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I cannot let this occasion pass without making a very brief comment on the remarks of the majority leader of this body. I refer to his statement that this is the last time his voice will be raised in this Chamber. I am consoled by the fact that he will not leave the Chamber and that we Senators, at least, shall have the benefit of his counsel, his wisdom, and his advice in the deliberations which are to take place in this body within the next 4 years.

I raise my voice, Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. Acheson because, first, I have confidence in him; secondly, he is my friend; thirdly, he was born, reared, and educated in my State. His father was a distinguished and beloved Episcopal bishop in Connecticut. We in Connecticut have naturally taken a special pride in his achievements in government service. Those achievements have indicated a character and a disposition which have won him the admiration and affection of all members of the public who have had occasion to come into contact with him.

I am especially pleased that he seems to be opposed by what I would term the extreme left and the extreme right. He is a man who knows the middle of the road. He is a man who knows the value of adherence to principle, and he is a man who knows the art of diplomatic compliment.

Reference has been made to Mr. Acheson's achievements as Under Secretary of State, but there is one more achievement which I should like to point out for the record, because, in my opinion, the record which he shall make as Secretary of State, no matter how brilliant it may be, will contain no page which shines with greater distinction than does the one on which he took his part in writing the control policy for atomic energy in the State Department, which subsequently became the policy of the United Nations. That, Mr. President, is one of the achievements of diplomacy and statecraft in our time, and as the years go by its great value will continue to be recognized to the point where all men will agree with the truth of what I say.

Mr. Laski, an Englishman of great intellectuality, but with whose philosophy I certainly do not agree, recently made the remark that this achievement was probably the greatest one which has ever occurred in a free nation in diplomatic intercourse with other nations. That is, of course, only one of Mr. Acheson's achievements, but I thought it worth mentioning.

At any rate, Mr. President, the Senate will confirm the nomination of Mr. Acheson, I think, to the satisfaction of the people of the United States. I personally look forward to the opportunity of working with this friend and public servant in the effort which we here must make in the next 4 years in the forging of a permanent and lasting peace. That work has scarcely begun. There is much to do. I am very happy indeed that President Truman has sent to the Senate the nomination of a man for Secretary of State who, I am confident, will carry his share of the burden and will cooperate with the Senate in this great task.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the vote, but I do desire to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the majority leader.

When I first came to the House of Representatives I was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Acheson was one of the first witnesses to come before that committee. Throughout the following years he has appeared before various committees, particularly the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not believe there has ever been a witness from the executive department of the Government who appeared before committees with better information and more complete control of all the aspects of his subject. Most of the questions, it is true, dealt with economic affairs, such as were discussed at Breton Woods, and so forth. But he did a remarkable job and reported it to the Congress. I do not believe that any Secretary of State who has been nominated in the past 15 years has been better qualified by experience and by intellect to fill that position. While he has not had the top position in policy making, he has played an extremely important part in the implementation of the policy of the Government, and I, for one, take great heart and great encouragement in his appointment, and I am delighted to vote for the confirmation of his nomination.

Certainly, I do not mean by any implication at all to cast any reflection upon any other nomination of recent years, but I do think in all fairness no one can say that any man nominated equaled Mr. Acheson in experience for the position to which he has been appointed, which I believe indicates a very serious and forward step in the improvement of the foreign relations in the executive branch of the Government.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am very happy to vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Acheson to be Secretary of State.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the business before the Senate for consideration is the nomination of Mr. Acheson to become the Secretary of State. To me this is one of the most important nominations that will come before the Senate for confirmation in this session of the Congress, and I might add I think it may prove to be the most important in generations, for the man who is chosen and confirmed to be the next Secretary of State will hold the destiny of America and of the nations of the world in his hands. Mr. Acheson, or whoever may become Secretary of State, will be responsible for commitments affecting both our foreign and our domestic policy, because whatever commitments he makes internationally, as has already been demonstrated, will fashion our domestic policies at home. It just cannot be otherwise. So the confirmation of this nomination is a most serious responsibility. It is a matter for each individual Senator to settle for himself in his own mind and with his own conscience. It certainly is not a partisan matter in any sense of the word.

Mr. President, I am in complete accord with the observations made by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], about the provision that the President shall appoint his Cabinet members, with the advice and consent of the Senate, as he stated. Certainly, as he so forcefully said, the President has a right to choose whomever he pleases, because the administration is responsible, and if the administration is to assume responsibility, then the President should have the right to choose whom he wishes to carry out his administration policies. I think there can be no disagreement with those observations.

Mr. President, the Senate, too, has a duty and a responsibility, namely, to weigh and to exercise its best judgment in either acepting or rejecting a nomination. It is only in that light, as an individual Senator, that I make these very brief observations, in explanation only of the vote I intend to cast against the confirmation of Mr. Acheson's nomination.

Mr. President, when Mr. Acheson's nomination was announced I made this public statement:

> I was surprised at his nomination; my opinion of Mr. Acheson remains unchanged.

Later I made a further public statement, as follows:

> That any course of action I might take relative to the nomination would depend upon the report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

I have kept faith with that public statement, and I here and now wish to compliment the Committee on Foreign Relations for the manner in which they conducted the investigation, for the opportunity which they gave each and every person a chance for a public hearing to question Mr. Acheson, through the chairman. I personally wish to thank the chairman of the committee for taking action in the orderly fashion he has followed, having the nomination lie over 24 hours. No one could help having praise for the very admirable and fair way in which the nomination has been handled.

Mr. President, as I have said, the nomination of Mr. Acheson came as a complete surprise. It was a surprise to me because of his record. His influence has affected vital policies of the Government in many cases in recent years.

As the able majority leader has said, Mr. Acheson has appeared on Capitol Hill time after time representing the administration. He went to the Treasury Department early in 1933, and remained there until November. In 1941 he became Assistant Secretary of State, and remained in the State Department until about a year ago. So he has had a long experience, and time after time he has come to the Capitol and appeared before committees, and has represented the administration on many important pieces of legislation.

It was Mr. Acheson who presented the UNRRA legislation to Congress. He helped to sell it to the Members of Congress. He, more than anyone else, in my opinion, was responsible for attempting to sell it to the American people. So what? it may be asked. It is easy to forget, but all of us know UNRRA turned out to be an international organization which helped to siphon food and goods to help Russia and her satellite countries, whom we sought to encourage, and whose friendship and cooperation we were then seeking, and do now seek.

UNRRA food was used for other purposes besides that. I shall never forget my experience when, on my own, I went to Europe to investigate. I found that Russia fed her armies off the food of the land in other countries, while UNRRA was used to feed the civilian population. So that in reality, as was found to be true in Russian-occupied Austria, we actually furnished the food to feed the Russian armies.

Mr. President, I am simply giving my own opinion, and all other Senators have the privilege of their own opinion, but

I would hold that if I voted for Dean Acheson today, it would mean that I condone UNRRA, an international organization which I did not and cannot now justify. As I said a moment ago, Senators can, of course, believe as they please; that is their privilege, but my conscience will not permit me to confirm the nomination of Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State, because I think that would mean that I condone that piece of legislation which he presented to the Congress and helped to sell to the American people.

During the period when Mr. Acheson was in the Department of State the administration executed many secret agreements. I do not say he was a party to them, but I do say the Department executed a great many secret agreements, such as the Yalta agreement, and agreements which provided that German industry be decentralized. I found that to be true when I was over there. The administration's plans provided for an extensive program of dismantling manufacturing plants in Germany, a program which I fought at every point along the road in the Senate. We are now replacing these plants with the money of the American taxpayer.

These secret agreements also provided for forcing the German people to make a living upon the land, to lead an utterly different kind of life, and to engage in an entirely different economy than many of them had theretofore known. I said then, and I say now, that this program has retarded the recovery of all Europe. It created a vacuum in which 100,000,000 people of Germany and the satellite countries were thrown into confusion. This program cost the American taxpayers $20,000,000,000. It completely failed. The administration admitted its failure, because the Marshall plan was drafted to take its place. So, once again, I say that a vote for Mr. Acheson would, to my mind, mean condoning the enforcement of the administration's program to destroy the German industry and keep her forever an agricultural state.

It may be asked what Mr. Acheson has to do about that? He has been in the administration all these years. He is a part and parcel of the complete program, and he was in the State Department many days functioning as the Acting Secretary when he was the Under Secretary, carrying out the provisions of this administration. My conscience will not permit me to vote to condone what has taken place. I simply cannot do that this afternoon.

Mr. Acheson attempted to force upon Japan the acceptance of a unified government in the administration of which Russia would have had a part. It is unnecessary to go into that now. This issue was debated on the Senate floor for nearly 2 days, when Mr. Acheson's appointment as Under Secretary of the Department of State was under consideration. Certainly his attempt to impose on the people of Japan what I call a coalition government, in which the Communists could play a role to advance their ideology, should be given every consideration today when we vote to confirm or reject the nomination of Mr. Acheson to be Secretary of State. The record speaks for itself, if Senators want to read it. Were I to vote to confirm the nomination of Dean Acheson at this time it would mean that I approved his attempt to impose upon Japan what he called a most liberal government.

He was a part of the State Department regime that has given us the shameful policy in China under which China now is being captured and controlled by Communists under the direction and the leadership of Moscow. With the loss of China our whole position in the Orient has been jeopardized.

This is the record as I see it. These are the reasons why I made public the statement that I was surprised Mr. Acheson was chosen by the President to become his Secretary of State. Because of this record I formed my opinion, and my opinion has remained unchanged; therefore I cannot vote to confirm him now.

Then I looked at the report of the subcommittee. I went through the report of the hearings of the Foreign Relations Committee to see whether any part of this record was cleared up, whether or not any defense was made, because during many months of this time, Mr. Acheson, the Under Secretary of State, as I have said, acted as the Acting Secretary of State to carry out these policies.

What does the report of the Foreign Relations Committee reveal? To sum it up all in one brief paragraph it is simply this, that in some speeches since the Marshall plan was put into effect, Mr. Acheson has said that he now endorses nothing in the nature of an appeasement policy toward Russia. But there is not anything to guide us respecting what we might expect from Mr. Acheson as Secretary of State in his relations toward Russia except the broad general statement that he now makes to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. Adolf Berle, who was mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, formerly an Assistant Secretary of State, has corroborated my opinion of Mr. Acheson's record, in his testimony before the Committee on Un-American Activities, of the House of Representatives. Mr. Berle said then that Mr. Acheson was in the pro-Russian bloc of the State Department, along with the others the Senator mentioned.

After Mr. Acheson was nominated to be Secretary of State, Mr. Berle was quoted as saying that Mr. Acheson now has apparently had a change of heart toward Russia; that he has recanted his appease-Russia views, and is now O. K., thoroughly solid, in his position that Russia's dictators are trying to rule the world and cannot be appeased.

Mr. President and fellow Senators, as I have traveled around over the United States I have discovered a fact which cannot be denied, and I submit it to the Senate as I make this last observation relative to the confirmation of Mr. Acheson, that somehow it is common knowledge that Mr. Acheson has been an appeaser of Russia. This fact is proven also by the Foreign Relations Committee itself when it has allowed only one excerpt of Mr. Acheson's testimony taken in executive session to be made public. And what is it? Why, it is the excerpt that was quoted by the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, Mr. President. When I have completed the statement, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Texas. The excerpt in question is brief, and I will read it:

> It is my view that communism as a doctrine is economically fatal to a free society and to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Communism as an aggressive factor in world conquest is fatal to independent governments and to free peoples.

With that statement I have no disagreement whatsoever. I endorse it 1,000 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator mind if I finished my statement?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator had finished. I will defer my request.

Mr. WHERRY. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I will wait until the Senator completes his statement.

Mr. WHERRY. No, Mr. President; I am glad to yield now.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator made some reference to the Foreign Relations Committee giving out only one little excerpt. As chairman of that committee I will say to the Senator that we have a complete copy of the executive hearing, and the Senator from Nebraska is at liberty to come down to the committee room and read the whole proceedings at any time he wants to.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I have already commended the Senator from Texas upon the very fair treatment he has given to Senators.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not hunting compliments.

Mr. WHERRY. But the fact, if the Senator will permit me to state it, is that what I have said is common knowledge throughout the country, and I think my statement cannot be denied. If Senators will talk to the people in various sections of the country they will find it to be a matter of common knowledge that Mr. Acheson has, at least up to this time, been considered as one who has gone along in an appeasement policy toward Russia. He is a symbol of the administration, because he has been in it all these years.

The question may be asked: "What has UNRRA got to do with the matter? What has the Morgenthau plan got to do with it? What has Mr. Acheson's policy toward Japan to do with it?" It has this to do with the matter, that he has indelibly stamped himself among the people I know as one who has been in favor of appeasing Russia.

I say now that in order to defend him and in order to meet that criticism the Foreign Relations Committee evidently released this one excerpt. It is one of the finest statements I have ever heard of what it means to permit communism to come into an independent nation and destroy its economy. I have already said that I endorsed it a thousand percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield again.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not seek to interrupt the Senator to argue with him. All I meant to say was that the committee will permit any Senator to examine the record of its executive hearings.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not trying to argue with the Senator about his main discussion.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. IVES. The question which I wish to raise with the able Senator from Nebraska is a very pertinent question. The Senator has accused the gentleman whose nomination we are now considering of pursuing an appeasement policy with respect to Soviet Russia. I should like to ask the Senator if he will be so kind as to state at least one instance which he considers to be pursuit of such policy. I should like to know what it is. I have not been present all the time during this discussion. The Senator may have cited such instances already.

Mr. WHERRY. The endorsement of the UNRRA plan, permitting Russia to feed her armies off the food of the land, using our food to feed the civilian population, resulted in helping Russia in her policy toward satellite countries. That we cannot condone.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to complete my statement. I shall be glad then to answer any questions, but I should like to have the statement intact in the RECORD. However, inasmuch as I am asked these questions, I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from New York has asked me a question, and I should like to answer it. I cannot answer it if he will not permit me to do so.

The second thing on which I base my statement of Mr. Acheson's policy of Russian appeasement is the fact that during the years from 1940 until the time he left the State Department in 1947, Mr. Acheson was a party to the so-called Morgenthau plan, which I maintain was an appeasement policy toward Russia. That plan included the dismantling of plants in Germany and forcing the German people to decentralize, which has resulted in the spread of communism. The opposite policy would have been the way to stop the advance of communism in the first place. That plan has cost the American taxpayers $20,000,000,000, and I maintain that putting that program into effect has been a proappeasement policy toward Russia.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to answer his question. I have another example.

In 1945, when the nomination of the Under Secretary was brought to the floor of the Senate, it was Mr. Acheson who made a public statement that he felt that there should be established in Japan a more liberal government, a government in the administration of which Russia would have a part.

I do not know how many more examples the Senator wants to show that Mr. Acheson has carried out an appeasement policy toward Russia. That is my answer to his question.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to make a statement first.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator wishes to make a statement, I ask him to withhold it and make it at the conclusion of my remarks. I decline to yield until I finish this statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Getting back to the definition which has been given by Mr. Acheson, this expression means that there was doubt in the minds of members of the Committee on Foreign Relations. That is the way I feel about it. Certainly, if there was no doubt in their minds, there is a doubt in my mind that cannot be erased. There is still a grave doubt relative to Mr. Acheson's proappeasement policies with respect to Russia. In my judgment Mr. Acheson's record up to this moment is certainly in direct contradiction to the excerpt which has been released by the Foreign Relations Committee. My opinion is that only time will tell whether Mr. Acheson means what he says and says what he means.

Mr. President, I have nothing in the world personally against Mr. Acheson; but on the record itself it is impossible for me to vote for confirmation. However, I am most hopeful—and I should like to put this in blazing letters in the RECORD—that Mr. Acheson will carry out the work of Secretary of State in keeping with his most recent statement. So far as I am concerned, while I cannot vote for the confirmation of his nomination today, if he continues a firm policy toward Russia, as he has outlined in this statement to the committee, I want the President and every Member of the Senate to know that I shall do everything in my power to see that his policies receive my full support.

Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I do not wish to ask a question. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I should like to say something about UNRRA, which has been dragged into the discussion of the question now before us. Perhaps the question of UNRRA and its political implications has affected me as much as it has affected any other Member of the Senate. It so happens that my opponent, when I ran for the Senate in 1946, had been the Director of UNRRA. I refer to former Governor Lehman, of New York State.

I wish to point out to Members of the Senate that the question of UNRRA, so far as its being a question of pro-Soviet or anti-Soviet relationship is concerned, had nothing to do with the issues in my campaign. I have never accused Governor Lehman—and I never shall—of being pro-Russian, unless something incredible happens after these remarks to cause me to change my attitude. I know that he is an intensely loyal American.

I do not believe that the question of UNRRA has anything to do with the question now before us. It was very pertinent in 1946; but at that time there were a great many loyal Americans who were strongly in favor of UNRRA and other aid of that kind. Some were very critical of the way in which it was being handled. Some were critical regarding the wisdom of the policy which was being followed. But I know of no one who was accusing anyone in high office of being pro-Russian in his attitude in that connection; and I do not believe that the question of UNRRA has the remotest thing to do with the subject now before us.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything at all on this subject, but I believe an explanation of how I intend to vote might be in order.

I realize that a man in public life today who believes as I do will be held up to ridicule and sarcasm, and will be driven from public office, although he is sincere to the bottom of his heart in his beliefs.

Mr. President, since I have been a Member of the Senate I have cast one bad vote, in my estimation. As a freshman Senator I voted for the Greek-Turkish loan. That was a vote, supposedly, to contain communism wherever it reared its ugly head. I was for that, and I believe America was for it. However, I watched the unfolding of the foreign policy. As the Senator from Nebraska has pointed out, for a while we went down the road of UNRRA and the Morgenthau plan, and then, suddenly, we completely changed our direction and became firm. We quit playing put-and-take with Uncle Joe, although, as one in high office says, he is not a bad fellow, and he likes him.

What happened to the Truman doctrine? I was told on the floor of the Senate that wherever communism reared its ugly head there the American Government would strike back, with force, if necessary, to contain it. I ask Senators who are my elders and who are experienced in these matters what happened to the Truman plan in China? This very day China is being overrun by Communists. Nothing save America will keep all of China and all of Asia from going communistic. When that happens 50 percent of the population of the entire world will be under communistic domination.

We started with a foreign policy over the past 4 or 5 years which would have required one with St. Vitus dance to follow. It has happened in this great country that a man who honestly believes that he should be for his country, and should try to make it strong and sound, is compared to a worm crawling on a rotten board in a wall. He is ridiculed and subjected to sarcasm if he dares say that he is for his country first. I am not ashamed of the stand I take. I think this foreign policy is absurd, and I think America is going to get ulcers if the present program is continued. I have said that before or this very floor.

Here we are, Mr. President, faced in our own Nation with tremendous problems. I point out education, for example. Within 5 years from today, 6,000,000 children will need public schooling in the United States, and yet every school district in my State is up to the hilt in debt, and cannot provide for adequate education. Bills for national education will be introduced in the Congress, because the same problem of education exists in other States, and some Senators say the problem exists particularly in some of the Southern States.

Others talk about health. Of course America needs public health; but under our foreign policy we are paying for free medicine, socialized medicine if you please, in other countries. People in England are given free eyeglasses, free false teeth, free babies, free everything; and the American taxpayer is paying for all of it. Why on earth can we not have it for our own people, Mr. President?

So I could run through the list, and mention reclamation; the need for more power and greater production, and many other problems.

Mr. President, do you know what it will cost to provide properly for the public health of the people of America? The cost will run into the billions of dollars.

I simply say that I do not believe we can do all these things for our own people and all these things for people all over the world, and still remain a strong, free, economically sound Nation. I say to you, Mr. President, that we were the first to have the free-enterprise system, and under God's sun today we are the last Nation that has a free-enterprise system. I say to you that the hope of all other peoples and the hope of freedom all over the world will go down into the rat holes of time unless America remains strong. This year we shall spend at least $45,000,000,000 for government. With the proposed projects offered to our people and with the proposed projects for continuing the enormous foreign policy we have launched upon, we shall easily be spending from $60,000,000,000 to $70,000,000,000 in the next 2 or 3 years. Mr. President, today in the United States production is at an all-time peak, and we cannot take taxes of from $60,000,000,000 to $70,000,000,000 out of the American economy, and still remain a strong, economically sound Nation.

Mr. President, some may call me an isolationist, some may laugh at me, some may call me a reactionary, and some may call me a conservative; they may call me whatever they please; but I say to you that I stand here today as a liberal, because one who will preserve his country, this country of ours, and its freedoms, and will give liberty and justice to our people is the greatest liberal there can be.

So, Mr. President, on the basis that Mr. Acheson is willing to go along with UNRRA, and is willing to go along with a unified Japanese Government, and is willing to go along with the Morgenthau plan, by which we took factories from Germany and sent them to Uncle Joe, playing put and take—we put our money over there, and Uncle Joe takes—on that basis, on the basis that Mr. Acheson believes in the policy that our Government is pursuing today, I, in my deepest convictions, could not condone that or vote for confirmation of the nomination of a man who entertains such ideas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. WHERRY. On this question, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I shall take only 2 or 3 minutes of the time of the Senate in connection with the nomination of Mr. Acheson, but I believe in justice to my position I should make my record clear on this matter.

As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee I voted to recommend the confirmation of the appointment by the President of Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State. I shall vote to confirm this appointment by the Senate. In taking this position I am fully aware of certain factors which have caused controversy in connection with the appointment, and I have weighed all such factors in reaching a decision to vote for confirmation. It has long been accepted as fundamental that the President shall have the widest latitude in the selection of members of his official family, who make up his Cabinet and the Senate has exercised great restraint, from time to time, in opposing this very important right lodged in the President. The Secretary of State is the ranking officer in the President's Cabinet, the individual through whom the President exercises his constitutional obligations and functions in connection with foreign affairs. Because of the responsibility lodged in the President with respect to foreign affairs, he should be free to select his spokesman in this field, but in return for this freedom of selection he must also assume full responsibility for the management of foreign affairs by his Secretary of State. He must be, and is, answerable to the American people for the success or failure of this Department in the conduct of our foreign relations. I may remind you, Mr. President, that the people of the United States elected the President and charged him thereby with this responsibility.

In connection with the Senate's confirmation of such appointment it must be borne in mind that the Senate does not have the appointing power and has no choice of alternative selections.

It is always probable that any specific appointment to such an office by the President might be objected to by some because, in their opinion, another individual might be more acceptable or might be better able to do the job, but, again, the appointing power rests with the President and not with the Senate, and I have no choice except to vote for or against the President's appointment, in which latter case fairness would demand that I support my objection with most substantial reasons. I do not believe these reasons should be whimsical or nebulous.

So far as Mr. Acheson is concerned, there is not the slightest doubt in my mind as to his personal integrity. I believe it to be of an unusually high order. So far as his mental ability is concerned there is no question. I believe him to be a brilliant man. So far as his experience in international matters is concerned, he has had opportunity for unusual experience in the State Department and in other phases of government operation, during a period when matters vitally affecting future policy have been formulated. He therefore brings to the office personal integrity, high ability, and unusual experience.

Criticism has been directed at him, charging that he has had in the past a so-called soft policy toward Russia and a lack of perception of the destructive aims and purposes of communism so far as its objectives of infiltration and destruction of our form of government are concerned. These charges have not been substantiated, and in any event it is highly doubtful that he, as a subordinate official under the Secretary of State, made or was finally responsible for some of the ill-advised earlier foreign policies, the spawn of which now rise to plague us. So far as I am concerned he has fully and frankly discussed his views about the United States and our policy, and I am convinced that he is completely devoted to and is fully aware of the necessity of unswerving advancement of the principles upon which our Government lives, and that he will defend those principles for us and for the world.

Criticism has repeatedly been directed at the State Department because of the infiltration of a number of so-called fellow travelers in this vital Department, and suggestions have been made that Mr. Acheson, while never personally accused of being suspected as a fellow traveler, has, nevertheless, by a blind loyalty to certain associates and friends, shut his mind to the possibility of such infiltration in important and vital areas of our foreign department. There is every evidence that he has a strong and tenacious loyalty to those for whom he forms a friendship. It might be possible that this quality of loyalty to friends, which is not to be condemned as a general principle, on occasions might have compelled him, or might now compel him, to refuse to be suspicious where reasonable grounds for suspicion might exist. Nevertheless, I have confidence that he will differentiate between personal loyalties and personal friends, on the one hand, and vital public interests, on the other; that he will not let the first control his judgment or his actions, with regard to personnel in the State Department, in connection with inviolate safeguarding of public business vital to our security.

He is the choice of the President for this vital Cabinet post. His selection and future administration of the Department is the prerogative and also the responsibility of the President. I trust and believe that he will bring to the office a high degree of ability and perception, and I wish him, not only personally, but also in the interests of the recovery of a free world, every success.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD four editorials from the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, commenting on the qualifications of Mr. Dean Acheson for the position of Secretary of State and

Mr. James E. Webb for the position of Under Secretary of State. In my opinion, the careful analysis of the appointments and their effect on foreign policy contained in these editorials makes their preparation and publication a real public service, and I believe they merit the consideration of everyone interested in the foreign policy of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW SECRETARY OF STATE—I

Unlike Presidents Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt, President Truman will not be his own Secretary of State. Therefore his appointment of a new Secretary of State to succeed Secretary Marshall at this crucial period of world affairs is an event of importance to ourselves, and indeed the world, second only to the election of a new President.

It is not that our foreign policy will suffer a break in continuity but that, in a world which does move, changing circumstances alter cases and that new facts and personalities interact on each other to mold history inexorably for better or worse.

The appointment of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State and James E. Webb as Under Secretary is therefore a major event deserving the most thoughtful consideration at home. We may be sure it will receive it abroad.

North Carolinians naturally take pride in the Webb appointment. James Webb has a brilliant record in scholarship, business, war and government. That record tends to show that he has the brains, force, and character to meet successfully the exacting duties of the position to which he has been called.

But the literally awe-inspiring responsibility of guiding the foreign policy of the United States, with all that that means to each one of us and the civilization of which we are a part, has fallen on the shoulders of one man, Dean Acheson. This does not mean exactly that he is a solitary Atlas, for he will have the help of able men in his Department, in his Government, and indeed in other governments; but it does mean that the ultimate—or at least the penultimate—responsibility of directing our foreign policy in an extremely perplexing and perilous world is squarely his and that he will need the comprehending support of the people of the United States as badly as they will need his wise leadership.

It is natural then for the people to be asking questions about their new Secretary of State. What sort of man is he? What is his training? What is his experience? What is his basic philosophy? How does it apply to the world today? To the United States? To Russia? What are his ideas of short-term and long-term foreign policy? Of the way to attain durable peace?

NEW SECRETARY OF STATE—II

Dean Acheson, our new Secretary of State, was born in Connecticut 55 years ago, the son of an Episcopal bishop; got an A. B. degree at Yale in 1915 and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1918; served as an ensign in the United States Navy in World War I; acted as private secretary to Justice Brandeis of the United States Supreme Court; practiced law; served as Under Secretary of the United States Treasury for a short time in 1933, resigning because of a split with President Roosevelt over the devaluation of the dollar; practiced law again; returned to Government service as Assistant Secretary of State in 1941 and served as Assistant or Under Secretary of State from February 1941 to July 1947, that is to say, during the whole of World War II and then some.

So much for his training and experience which are excellent and extensive.

What are Secretary Acheson's basic philosophy and attitude toward world affairs?

Some light may be thrown on this by considering what he did as Under Secretary of State. In addition to his work during the war years, he had a leading part in formulating our program of aid to Greece and of Soviet containment and in originating and drafting the Marshall plan. He also directed as chairman the work of the Committee on Atomic Energy which resulted in the Acheson-Lilienthal Report on the International Control of Atomic Energy which formed the basis for the Baruch plan and which is probably the finest example of men thinking, and by that thinking reaching a possible solution for an almost insoluble problem which our period of history affords.

Further light may be thrown on the question not only by what he has done but also by what he has said.

It may be recalled that at a time when we were still speaking softly to the Soviet Union in order not to offend her sensibilities, he characterized the Russian policy (February 10, 1947) as an aggressive and expanding one.

But the fullest and clearest statement of Secretary Acheson's philosophy and conclusions on various phases of foreign affairs that we have seen is his speech at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., on June 15, 1947, a couple of weeks before his resignation as Under Secretary of State. It was a brilliant and illuminating speech, worthy of deep consideration and extended quotation.

In it he asked himself, "What is the fundamental tradition of the American people?" His answer was this: It is "insistence upon the liberty of the individual, the worth of the individual, the ultimate test of truth by reference to the individual. * * * It seems true in society as in nature that the greatest energy is created by releasing the power of the smallest unit. In one case, the individual; in the other case, the atom. History and philosophy gave us this doctrine. Geography and experience have confirmed it."

A corollary of our insistence on our own freedom is our desire to extend freedom to others. But "we have no desire to force our behavior and ideas on other people. If for reasons incomprehensible to us they want to act differently and—to us—quite misguidedly, that is their affair. But we don't like them to push other peoples around—particularly when those other peoples are trying to live as we think all decent people should live."

Yet he made it clear that in his thinking liberty was not something to be passed around like a box of candy. "It seems to me that liberty has come to those whose stout hearts and hard heads have won it. Here again we must conclude with Jusitce Holmes that the mode by which the inevitable comes to pass is effort."

NEW SECRETARY OF STATE—III

One very good reason why there will probably be no break in the continuity of our foreign policy is that our policy was in the main formulated by the very man who has now been appointed Secretary of State to carry it out. This policy in its short-term phase consists largely of containment of the Soviet Union and aid to countries attempting to keep themselves free of Soviet encroachment.

In a speech at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, made just 2 weeks before his resignation from the position of Under Secretary of State on July 1, 1947, Mr. Acheson spoke strongly and freely.

Part of his speech was in effect a bill of indictment against the Soviet Union for its postwar course of aggressive expansion. After noting the aid we had given the Soviet Union up to that time, amounting to some $12,000,000,000, and the series of acts we had engaged in with a view to securing international peace and individual freedom, he charged the Soviet Union with blocking those efforts, opposing international accord and recovery, using its military position in Eastern Europe to violate the Yalta agreements, and to fasten unwanted governments and economic arrangements on the peoples involved, fostering war in Greece, et cetera. Due to these acts, he said the United Nations had not been able to "apply the principles set forth in its charter but has instead had to furnish the forum for bitter, unprofitable and inconclusive dialectics."

From this and other sources it appears clear that Mr. Acheson, far from being too soft on the Soviet Union, is in the forefront of those who would halt its expansion.

Perhaps this is the central problem of our foreign policy. But bound up with it and no less perplexing is the problem of what we should do about conditions in various parts of the world which breed revolutions, and in which, indeed, revolutions are sometimes overdue, but which lend themselves all too easily to Communist exploitation.

On this general theme Mr. Acheson said:

"This country always has responded to people struggling to attain or maintain their freedom. We have done so because it is important to us that they shall succeed. Sometimes we can do much, sometimes little, but the response is always there. It was there in the case of Greece over a century ago and in the case of Hungary and Poland and Italy. It was there throughout the nineteenth century in the struggle of the Latin-American states to obtain and keep their freedom from the encroachments of European powers. It underlay our efforts for decades to help China in her struggle against foreign subjugation.

"So President Truman was acting and the Congress was acting in the truest and soundest American tradition. The case was an extreme one because Greece was near the abyss. But the principle was as old as our country."

Such a policy is clear enough in principle. But it is very difficult in its application. We want to give Europe back to the Europeans, but not to the Darlans and the Badoglios, the black marketeers and racketeers, the Fascists or the Communists. Our great tradition is for freedom, as Mr. Acheson so clearly sees, but our intervention has not brought freedom to Greece or China, the two countries where our policy has met its most open tests.

The trouble has been perhaps in the administration of that policy. If so, the new Secretary has a job on his hands of attaining that policy's aim through more effective methods. In some countries, as in China, the problem may be insoluble. In any case we think that Mr. Acheson will cope with it—and with Russia—as well as anyone the President could have chosen.

NEW SECRETARY OF STATE—IV

The Department of State needs thorough overhauling. For a long time the United States, protected by two oceans and the British Navy, could enjoy the luxury of a situation in which no foreign policy was better than any foreign policy. Those days are gone forever. What was left was buried in the blitz of London and the atomization of Hiroshima.

Now the State Department faces a world it never made, a world which is very badly out of joint and which, being radioactive, is entirely too close for comfort. The Department was not made to deal with anything like it, but must do something about it—and fast.

When Dean Acheson's appointment is confirmed, the United States will have had five Secretaries of State within a little more than 4 years. That is quite a turn-over for a position which demands unlimited wisdom and experience. It has been our custom to appoint men as Secretaries of State with little experience in the field of foreign policy and to give them Under Secretaries who know what foreign policy is all about.

With Dean Acheson as Secretary and James E. Webb as Under Secretary this custom will be reversed. The stage is thus set for overhauling the Department. Acheson will not have to learn about foreign policy because he knows about it already. He will not even have to formulate it because he did that as Under Secretary. He will just have to keep it rolling and tend to the steering wheel.

He and James Webb, who is an excellent administrator, can thus concentrate for a time on bringing the Department up to date as a piece of governmental machinery. It may not be futuramic when they finish the overhauling, but it will at least be a 1949 model instead of a 1919 one.

Mr. Acheson has some ideas for modernizing the Department, as James Reston points out in the New York Times:

"It is known, for example, that he favors (1) placing the foreign service and the State Department under a single administration; (2) appointing two deputy Under Secretaries of State, one for policy and one for administration; (3) reorganizing the whole assistant secretary level in the Department so that there will be eight assistant secretaries; for public affairs (including the Voice of America), for international affairs (UN and conferences), for coordinating policy with other agencies, for congressional affairs, for Europe, for the near eastern and African affairs, for far eastern affairs, and for Latin-American affairs; (4) creating an intelligence evaluation committee to advise the Secretary and keep in contact with the Central Intelligence Agency."

These, we should think, are reforms which are necessary now.

But perhaps something more is needed, something more elusive but far more important, a long-term program for durable world peace, something which must be based not on containment or balance of power, but on world law enacted and enforced by the necessary government of the whole.

The State Department has neglected this essential defense, not only of our Nation but of our civilization.

It is easy enough to see why it has done so. With a mortality rate of approximately one Secretary of State a year, and with our secretaries kept so busy traveling, conferring, and arguing that they hardly ever had time to see more than one jump ahead, how could such a long-term policy have had a chance of conception, much less of birth?

We hope that Dean Acheson will be Secretary of State a long time, and that he will do something about it. The problem of world government, for that is what it is, is a most difficult one, since it involves the creation of a government which would not be more dangerous to the liberties of men than the present anarchy which it would supersede. Yet nations must admit to the rule of law if our civilization would live. The problems of world government and of the control of atomic energy are binary stars; they cannot be solved separately. The State Department found a board of distinguished consultants useful in reaching a possible solution for the latter problem; this solution contained at least the seeds of a world government. Why would it not prove profitable for the new Secretary to appoint a board of consultants on the control of national energy through law—manned by elder statesmen such as Stimson, Baruch, Byrnes, Grenville Clark, and Thomas K. Finletter—to work out a long-range program for what must be our fundamental foreign policy, the establishment of enduring peace?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State?

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], who is absent because of illness, would vote "yea" if present.

I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is attending the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of Hon. Elbert N. Carvel as Governor of the State of Delaware, and the Honorable Alexis I. Dupont Bayard, as Lieutenant Governor of the State of Delaware, and is therefore necessarily absent. If present, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who are necessarily absent, would vote "yea," if present.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is absent because of illness, would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] is unavoidably detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 83, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—83

So Mr. Acheson's nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmation.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall take only a minute or two of the time of the Senate.

I think all of us could not fail to detect a little sadness not only in the voice of the speaker but in the sentiments manifested by Senators when our distinguished leader on this side of the aisle, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said, rather hesitatingly, a few moments ago, that perhaps those were his last remarks as a Senator. Although the words to which I shall now refer were used by President Roosevelt in referring to another great American, I do not know of any other man who could more aptly be described in the way that Franklin D. Roosevelt described Al Smith when he nominated him to be Democratic candidate for President: The Happy Warrior. Certainly that is the proper description of ALBEN BARKLEY.

We have known him here, and he has been loved by us as few men have been loved. He has the greatest variety of talents that could almost be imagined. He can roar like a lion or coo with the gentleness of a wooing dove. With his ever-constant good humor, he could smooth over even exasperating disagreements.

Surely, Mr. President, unless he shall come back once more to our membership with even greater honors, we shall not again see the like of ALBEN BARKLEY.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I wish to add just a word to what has been said about our majority leader, who is leaving us.

I have had a very high regard for him ever since I came to the United States Senate. I think one of the best things about the way the recent election turned out is that I was defeated by ALBEN BARKLEY. [Laughter.]

ALBEN BARKLEY has always been very kind to me. I wish to say that in the recent election I was not running against him; I was looking for an opportunity to "cuss" our foreign policy. So there was nothing personal about that matter, and in the campaign I never once mentioned ALBEN BARKLEY'S name. If anyone ever asked me privately about him, I always said he was a swell fellow, and I think he is and I know he is.

Mr. President, we shall hate to have him leave our midst; but it may be better to have him sitting on the rostrum before us, where we can look at his handsome face all the time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is not easy for me to find the words which express the subtle mixture of my feelings today as I rise to add my voice to the chorus of other voices lifted in tribute to our beloved leader, ALBEN BARKLEY.

We rejoice with him that by the grace of the American people he leaves the Senate floor to assume another and higher office. And yet our joy is tempered by our own sense of irreplaceable loss. No longer will we hear this chamber ring with his persuasive speech. No longer will we smile at the gracious wit which so distinguishes his eloquence. The rough and tumble of debate within these historic walls will always be the poorer because by reason of his office he is cut off from partaking in it.

But for those of us on this side of the aisle, it means a much graver loss. By his elevation to the Vice Presidency we lose a man who has led us for nearly 12 years—years which thrust on the broad shoulders of the majority leader legislative problems more complex and more onerous than any faced by any other leader in our time.

How valiantly he discharged the responsibility of his office must be left to the judgment of history. But while we can, let us who have been with him in the battle give testimony of the stout heart and nimble brain which earned him the respect and affection of every man of whatever party who has served in the Senate since he came here more than a score of years ago.

And, because of our esteem, let us share his pleasure at the reward he has now received at the hands of the people. For it is not every man who, having stepped over the threshold of the biblical three score years and ten, goes not into seclusion but into more exalted office. To me there is a kind of happy fitness in the fact that his career in this body should culminate by his presiding over it, where his amazing fund of parliamentary learning will be put to its most important use.

Many great men have sat in the chair of the President of the Senate. I venture to suggest, however, that since John Adams presided over the first session of the Senate no man has ever been more suited to fulfill the duties of that office than the senior Senator from Kentucky.

We remember him best for our delight in his great poise and ready wit. And yet we miss the essential point if we fail to realize that this same wit, this same poise, concealed a man of towering stature, who some day will take his rightful place among the greatest statesmen who have graced American politics since Washington and Jefferson first led the young Republic into nationhood. But only those of us who have had the privilege of day-to-day association with him in debate, in conference, and in a common bond of fellowship, can really appreciate the sterling qualities of our friend.

His career has followed in all those classical traditions of America's great men. Like another great statesman and story teller, the immortal Abraham Lincoln, BARKLEY, too, was born in a log cabin in Kentucky. He possesses the same Lincolnian traits of tolerance and humanity. In his life's struggle to succeed, he experienced similar vicissitudes.

It is not for me, as one who has served with him for the brief space of only 10 years, to describe the brilliance of that congressional career. That I leave to others in this body, whose service runs in length of years much beyond mine. Let me say only that, for my part, I shall always treasure the hours without number we have spent together as political allies, united by the bond of a deep friendship. I look forward to many more such hours which his vigor and strength so amply promise. He is still ours, though he leaves his seat on the floor to ascend to the seat of the Presiding Officer. It is a comfort to know he will be there, ready, from his rich store of experience, to lend us the guidance and counsel we have learned to trust.

I know that I speak the mind of the 96 Members of this body and, indeed, of the American people, when I say that we wish for him everything in life he wishes for himself. No man ever deserved more for his patient, devoted, and brilliant service to the American people and the institutions that we represent.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I hasten to join in the observations made in tribute to the retiring majority leader. Much has been said along that line, and I wish to join in the sentiments expressed. If the remarks just made were the last speech the Senator from Kentucky is to make in the Senate, I rather acknowledge that with reluctance, because I know the Senator would desire to take part in legislation whenever he had the opportunity.

Besides being an outstanding leader, which has been listed as one of his qualities, one thing I would mention this afternoon is that after 6 years of association with him, I pay tribute to him for rising to the heights when it became necessary to pour oil on the troubled waters. He has watched the Senate explode, which it does at times, and then stepped in, and in masterly fashion sort of quieted us, and we got down to business and performed the work the Senate was supposed to do.

I shall never forget the tribute he paid some of us at the conclusion of a very hectic session in 1944 or 1945, when the OPA and price controls were under consideration. Several times during the debate the Senator from Kentucky and the junior Senator from Nebraska had had very serious issues presented to us, he on one side and I on the other, and finally, as he went around smoothing everything over, he came over to our side of the aisle and said, "There is the junior Senator from Nebraska. I love him. I love him more than any man with whom I have so often differed."

Mr. President, that illustrated the philosophy of the retiring majority leader, and after that speech, he had me feeling that he was one of the outstanding leaders we have had in the Senate of the United States.

I therefore assure the Senator that as he retires as majority leader, those on this side of the aisle will remember him and cherish the very pleasant memories we have of him, even of some occasions when we were under pressure and there was a great deal of heat. We will reflect with pleasure upon his actions in the days to come.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, some of us who were sitting here in the Senate a few minutes ago observed what I think is a very historic incident, that is, the preparation which the majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], was making at his desk for departure from the floor of the Senate. It causes many of us sadness to see him leave his place on the floor of the United States Senate, and that is true regardless of whether we are on one side of the aisle or the other.

I rose particularly at this moment, however, for the purpose of calling attention, for the record, to one historical fact of which I am sure the people of the great State of Missouri who know of it are, and those who do not know of it would be, very proud, namely, that the birthplace of the mother of our distinguished friend, Senator ALBEN BARKLEY, was Caruthersville, Pemiscot County, Mo. I realize that the influence of a mother upon a son or daughter can be, and usually is, of the highest value in the formation of character and in the development of the traits of manhood or womanhood.

So, this afternoon, Mr. President, as one who was born in Missouri, I take pleasure in expressing to the Senator from Kentucky our pride in the fact that his mother came from our great State.

I also take this opportunity to wish him Godspeed in his future undertakings.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to express my personal regret that the Senator from Kentucky is no longer to conduct, as leader, Democratic affairs on the floor of the Senate, that we are not to be able to engage in the very pleasant controversies like those which have characterized our relations for 10 years.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and I have worked together for some 8 years while he was majority leader. We have labored together on the Committee on Banking and Currency in attempting to work out many of the problems which arose during and after the war. We had some very violent differences of opinion on the floor, but I do not think anyone has ever questioned that the Senator from Kentucky treated everyone in the Senate most fairly throughout the administration of his office as majority leader.

During the past 2 years the Senator has, in the most kindly way, cooperated in procedure to forward the business of the Senate. He has sometimes become very excited in debate, but I do not recall an occasion when 5 minutes later he did not have all the good humor which any man could possess. I do not recall the time when he was not willing to forget personal differences of opinion, and I certainly regret very much, from the point of view of our own pleasure here on the floor of the Senate in the conduct of orderly and friendly and determined debate, that he is to take the seat on the rostrum.

Mr. President, I recall that in the play, The State of the Union, the man who was asked to take the nomination for the Vice Presidency refused to do so because he thought his mother would not like it, and the answer to him was, "Oh, she will never know." [Laughter.] I hope very much that we never will really know that the senior Senator from Kentucky is removed from us as Vice President, and I trust that he will maintain the same personal relations with us here in the Senate which have characterized our friendship during the last 10 years. [Applause.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief comment on the very high esteem in which I hold the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I should like to point out to the young people of America that if they will study the political record of the Senator from Kentucky they will study a record of statesmanship put to work. I wish here publicly to express my debt of gratitude to the Senator for the inspiration he was to me long before I came to the Senate of the United States, and has been ever since I have been a Member of the Senate. He is a great liberal, and, after all, standing for the liberal principles of great human values knows no party. I submit his record as an example of liberalism in the highest sense, put to work for the benefit of the people of his country.

OBJECTION TO MEETINGS OF COMMITTEES DURING SENATE SESSIONS AND NOTICE OF OBJECTION TO CERTAIN UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the last comment I want to make is by way of an announcement so that—although I do not hope for agreement—there will be no misunderstanding as to two parliamentary positions I shall take during the Eighty-first Congress. I think the time to announce those positions is at the beginning of the Congress.

Last Thursday afternoon, while the Senate was in session, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare held a very important meeting. It was a meeting I would have liked to attend had it not been for the fact that I felt that my first duty was on the floor of the Senate, and for the further fact that I was engaged in a running debate during most of Thursday afternoon. However, Mr. President, I have before expressed my conviction that the Senate sessions should be attended by Members of the Senate and that I do not think that at the time Senate sessions are being held Senate committee meetings should be held. Certainly that is not only the spirit and the intent, but it is also the letter of the law. I read the following provisions from the Reorganization Act of 1946:

> No standing committee of the Senate or the House, except the Committee on Rules of the House, shall sit, without special leave, while the Senate or the House, as the case may be, is in session.

This morning, Mr. President, we had another meeting of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and I was advised at that meeting that the committee last Thursday afternoon had decided to hold its regular meetings on Thursday afternoons. At the meeting this morning I protested and said that the junior Senator from Oregon, within his rights as a Senator, would always object on the floor of the Senate to any meeting of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare being called on Thursday afternoon, if the Senate were in session, unless some exceptional circumstances would justify departure from what I think clearly was intended by the provision I have read from the Reorganization Act.

Mr. President, the holding of Senate committee meetings when the Senate is in session has become the practice of the Senate and not the exception. Therefore I serve notice, Mr. President, that, insofar as any Senate committee of which I am a member is concerned, it will be my parliamentary practice to object to any meeting being held while the Senate is in session. If that is not the desire of the Senate, then let the Senate change the Reorganization Act. I submit, Mr. President, that if enough Members of this body would follow that practice in connection with committees of which they are members, we soon would bring about a change in our procedure which is much to be desired, namely, a modification of our rules whereby the Senate would meet on certain specific days, such as, for example, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, leaving the other days for committee meetings. But I do not think that it is consonant with orderly procedure in the Senate and with deliberate consideration of the people's business to have this body in session and at the same time have a series of committee meetings being held around the Capitol which take the membership of the Senate off the floor.

Mr. President, the second notice I want to serve is that it will be my practice, as a general rule, to object to any unanimous-consent agreements to fix voting time as of a specific hour, with a proviso that a certain amount of time shall be divided up at the discretion of the leaders on the two sides of a bill prior to the vote. As a general practice, again subject only to exception when it can be demonstrated to me that it is an exception, that it is desirable, or recognized, the junior Senator from Oregon will object to all unanimous-consent requests to vote as of a certain time. Although I have no right to it I shall request, and at this time wish to make the request, that I be allowed the courtesy of a quorum call before any such unanimous-consent request is made during the Eighty-first Congress.

THE SITUATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, this seems an appropriate time to refer on the Senate floor to the mixed situation in the Middle East. Today in the United States the Senate just now has confirmed the nomination of a new Secretary of State, and today in Parliament Winston Churchill and others are challenging Britain's Palestine policy. It is reported that Foreign Secretary Bevin will be asked for a statement on the Holy Land. I understand also that at least three Cabinet Members of His Majesty's Government are against Mr. Bevin's policy.

A number of Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives have mentioned the distressing subject of one-sided action by the British in the Middle East. I should like to join them in deploring this unfortunate position.

To see a great power bullying a small and weak neighbor is never a pretty spectacle. If the small and weak country shows a lot of courage and fighting spirit, and is willing to defend itself to the death against invasion, this does not change the fact that it is still small and weak.

The new Jewish State of Israel has shown just that spirit. It has shown courage and fighting spirit, and has successfully defended itself against invasion and attempts to destroy it by the six neighboring governments which ganged up on it. As a result, our respect for its people has grown rather than diminished. They have certainly earned the right to be left alone, especially now when these same neighbors seem ready to talk peace.

What the British are doing in the Middle East does not make nice reading. Everybody realizes what the British under the direction of Foreign Secretary Bevin are up to. They are after that part of the Jewish state which is known as the Negev and to some extent they are moved by wounded pride and anger against the Jews. Neither is a sentiment worthy of a great nation. If it is true, as our English friends say in public, that the Negev is an empty desert, it is not worthy of a great empire to begrudge a tiny nation the possession of a small desert. If it is true, as the Jews assert publicly and our English friends whisper in confidential tones, that the Negev has oil and other riches, Britain, which controls so much oil and so many riches, does not play a very noble role in trying to grasp for itself the one possible source of mineral wealth of that tiny new state; and if the main reason for this intrigue is unadulterated frustration and sheer bitterness of the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Bevin, and some other British officials, this certainly will not contribute to our esteem of British policy.

But the worst feature of all, in my opinion, is the devious search for alibis and the succession of lame excuses with which the British Government tries to cover up and to justify its course of action. Anything, even the brutal and crude admission that Britain wants to grab the Negev because it wants it, because it is strong enough to get it, and because it is annoyed at the Jews for having thrown her out of Palestine, would be better than such a show of hypocrisy.

At first, I understand, they pretended that they were coming to the aid of the Egyptians because Egypt asked them to—until it was shown that the Egyptians had not asked them at all. Then it was asserted that British planes were conducting their reconnaissance flight over Egyptian territory only—until it was proved that they were outside of Egypt and inside Palestine. Still later, British spokesmen explained that their planes went up at the request of the observers sent to the Middle East by the United Nations—until those observers denied ever having made such a request. Having run out of other excuses, they have even tried to involve the United States in these machinations by implying that the planes were sent up as a result of consultations with the United States Government—until our own Government vehemently denied it.

The latest British formula, I understand, while admitting that they sent the planes up on their own responsibility, is to hint that in some way they did it in order to do us a favor and to supply us with information which we allegedly wanted to obtain.

Let me say to our English friends that they will not achieve anything by that kind of tactics. They and we are united to keep the world as free, as peaceful, and as prosperous as possible. We hope that as a result of our united efforts the world will find that peace which men of good will everywhere seek. If a fight cannot be avoided, let us pick on someone our own size. The alliance between our country and Britain was not made in order to grab pennies from infants, nor to grab the Negev from the State of Israel, which is smaller than the State of Maryland. But if the British have to do it, let them come out in the open and admit that greed or frustration or whatever it is that induces them to pick a quarrel which might lead to another world war. Let them stop pretending to be noble while carrying on an act of petty imperialism, since no one will believe them anyway.

PROGRAM OF THE SENATE FOR REMAINDER OF THE WEEK

On motion of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, it was—

Ordered, That at the conclusion of its business today the Senate adjourn until Thursday, January 20, at 11:45 a. m.; that upon reconvening it proceed in a body to the east front of the Capitol for the ceremonies attending the inauguration of the President and Vice President of the United States; and that at the conclusion of said ceremonies the Senate stand adjourned until Monday next.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, under the order just entered, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until Thursday, January 20, 1949, at 11:45 a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as we meet today, help the Congress to walk in honor, avoiding anything that would dim the glory of free government.

O for a world of strife shut out and a world of good will and patience shut in. More and more give us courage to resist the allurements which so often are the fruits of success; more and more give us strength to fulfill our mission with patriotic zeal. Steady our hearts; guide us with Thine eye and keep us this day without sin. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDER VACATED

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted to me by the House for today be vacated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, upon the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and the special orders heretofore entered for that day, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects and to include newspaper articles.

Mr. GRAHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech made by a colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN JAMES, at the Franklin Memorial yesterday.

Mr. HARRISON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include sundry newspaper articles.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix in two separate instances, in one to include a statement from the Worldgram and in the other an address by Dr. Alexander Brin.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the State Legislature of South Carolina.

Mr. MULTER (at the request of Mr. HOLIFIELD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain extraneous material.

HOTEL RATES IN WASHINGTON

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, so far as I know a number of the hotels in Washington have not seen fit to take the public into their confidence by giving to the press a statement of their rates for the period of the inauguration. I, therefore, suggest that we cooperate in Congress by requesting our friends who are visiting Washington at this time to demand receipted bills when they make payment for their rooms and that they write on the back of the bill the type of accommodations they had. If we Members will accumulate this kind of evidence from our visitors we will have all the evidence we will need. In the meantime as to such hotel managers as are unwilling to reveal their rates, I recommend they read at least the last half of verse 19, chapter 3, of the Gospel of St. John.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include certain statements and excerpts.

Mr. HEFFERNAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a tribute to Max Abelman, secretary to the board of directors of the Jewish Hospital, of Brooklyn.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE STEEL SHORTAGE

Mr. MACY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACY. Mr. Speaker, you have listened with patience many times during the past year to comments I have had to make on this floor as to the necessity of bringing steel scrap from the German Ruhr to augment our scanty supplies of this vitally important ingredient to the manufacture of steel. Despite the fact that there has been no lessening of demand for finished steel, many of you may have noticed in the current press that the market for scrap steel has broken, and this must, at least in part, be attributed to the shipments that have been coming over from western Europe in our relief ships, which for the most part are returning empty. Whatever return of this scrap steel has been induced has been helpful, but I want to say to you that this has only been a mere trickle of what it should have been or what it should still be to reinforce our economy, not only for our domestic needs but to meet our commitments abroad. In other words, instead of 100,000 tons a month, we should be bringing back several times that amount to safeguard our position, and any idea that this could impair steel production abroad, which is steadily on the increase, cannot be supported by competent authority.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO RECEIVE MESSAGES AND THE SPEAKER TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House until Thursday next, the Clerk of the House be authorized to receive messages from the Senate and that the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE UNTIL JANUARY 20 AND FROM JANUARY 20 TO JANUARY 24, 1949

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 55) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the House adjourns on Tuesday, January 18, 1949, it stand adjourned until 11:30 a. m. Thursday, January 20, 1949; that upon convening at that hour the House proceed to the east front of the Capitol for the purpose of attending the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice President of the United States; and that upon the conclusion of the ceremonies the House stand adjourned until Monday, January 24, 1949.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make the following announcement:

The Joint Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies was appointed during the last session of Congress. The Chair has had many inquiries by Members with reference to the proceedings on Thursday. The Chair has been requested to announce to the House that all Members who expect to go out on the official platform will assemble here in the Chamber of the House at 11:30 o'clock Thursday morning. I have been requested to state that in order to get by the police, including the marines, it will be absolutely necessary for each Member to display the official ticket in order to get his seat on the Presidential platform. The committee feels that this is an entirely reasonable regulation.

If a Member does not have his ticket, it will be impossible for him to get his seat, for there will be no opportunity to join the procession after it leaves the House. There are no tickets available to ex-Members for this platform, inasmuch as the seating capacity is limited.

The Chair is further requested to announce that no children will be allowed upon the platform, and there will be no seats except for Members actually holding tickets for their own seats.

That, the Chair thinks, covers the announcement that he was requested to make.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, House Resolution 56, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Woodrow Wilson.

BEVIN BLOCKS PEACE

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the entire world could be at peace today but for one person—Ernest Bevin. His shameful, disgraceful behavior is causing us much concern.

It is clear that after the Arabs refused to continue their war against the Israeli Government with the use of British arms, the British Government, under Bevin, continued the undeclared war with its own manpower.

It is obvious today that, left alone, the Arabs and Israelis could negotiate a peaceful settlement of their differences. However, Bevin will not permit it to happen. Britain's official policy toward Palestine and Israel has been almost solely dictated by Bevin. This policy, which will be tested in full-dress debate in Parliament today, is one of nonrecognition of Israel and blocking Israel's entry into the United Nations and of restricting the new state in order to obtain and control the Negev and destroy the new nation of Israel.

Not only has Britain but the Netherlands as well have deliberately gone out of their way to break down the effectiveness of the United Nations. We will not permit them to make the United Nations another League of Nations. This is our last chance of world peace—another war will wipe out civilization.

We want peace and will exert all our efforts in that direction. If we are to have peace, we must recognize the sovereignty of other nations; we must certainly recognize Israel. Of course, ways must be found to bring unruly and obstreperous nations into line. We must hit them where it hurts them the most; not by declaration of war, but by withholding assistance.

The Marshall plan was never put into being to permit nations to use the funds for war. Are we to continue to give these nations help so that they in turn can continue their undeclared wars? It is our job to take the most effective means at our disposal to put a stop to all this blundering. The most effective action which we can take unilaterally is to lift the arms embargo to Israel, cement our friendship by extending de jure recognition, and approve the economic loans already being negotiated. This we must do at once. But we can and should go a large step further. We should make it clear at once that our European recovery funds will be shut off immediately to any nation, including Great Britain, which persists in financing a war of aggression.

We have been, in fact, nearly that firm with the Netherlands on Indonesia. We must be very firm with both these nations now, since if we falter at this time, the peace in Israel and the hope of peace in the world will be sacrificed to Ernest Bevin's hatred of Israel and his covetousness of the oil and land of the Negev.

The American people do not intend to finance any wars. We can best prove to the world that we want peace by withholding all Marshall-plan aid from any country which directly or indirectly participates in any acts of aggression. We must act at once. Any delay on our part at this time will be disastrous to world peace.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEEFE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in one an address he delivered before the Alexander Hamilton Club of Tulsa, Okla., on the evening of January 15, and in the other an editorial published in the Tulsa Tribune of January 15.

Mr. SCRIVNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article showing that Kansas needs a second Federal judge.

Mr. PETERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Representative WELCH of California.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a series of four articles from the New York Times as to how displaced persons have fared in the United States, notwithstanding the additional expense, which is estimated by the Government Printing Office at $177.50.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this will be perhaps the last opportunity this week to make an announcement in relation to the program for next week.

The committees have been officially organized, and many of them are going to start functioning next Monday. I am unable to state to the House at this time any program for next week. It is all dependent upon what action is taken by any of the committees. For example, if the minimum-wage law is reported out, I would make every effort to bring it up next week. I say this to illustrate my state of mind and my intentions. I cannot see that many bills would be reported out next week that could be called up, but there might be one or two which, if they are reported out of committee, I shall make every effort to bring up. I cannot give the House any kind of definite information as to the program for next week. I am sorry I am in this position, but there is no other statement I can make to the House at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what the one or two bills are that may be brought up?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state that, except that I referred to bringing up the legislation regarding increasing the minimum wage, if that is reported out of committee. I hope they will not have more than 1 day of hearings on that. It has been heard and reheard so many times that everybody knows his mind on that subject. I am very hopeful that the Committee on Education and Labor will hold hearings on that matter next Monday. I do not know whether they will or not, but I hope they will, and report out the bill. If so, I shall make every effort to bring it up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman would expect, of course, that on a bill of such great magnitude and importance to the American economy as a minimum-wage bill, that there would be at least 1 day of hearing and consideration in committee, would he not?

Mr. McCORMACK. I said 1 day. Of course, that is up to the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But he would expect that it would be given at least 1 day's consideration?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is up to the committee. Of course, my personal opinion is that it has been heard and reheard many times. There have been many hearings on it in past years.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman realizes, of course, that there are a good many new Members in the House of Representatives and on the committee and they might like to know about it, too.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, it is a matter of great import and favorable to the national economy of our country. I am sure that is what my friend had in mind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am referring to orderly procedure in the House and the orderly procedure of the work of legislating.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, if a bill is reported out, I want to advise the House that I naturally shall make every effort possible to bring it up next week. Whether or not it will be reported out, I cannot say. I hope it will be reported out, and, if it is, I shall make every effort to bring it up.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Has the Committee on House Administration on your side been completed?

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe so. I believe there are one or two vacancies, but it has been completed.

Mr. REED of New York. The reason I ask is that I am very anxious, if possible, to have the bill which I introduced to amend the Reorganization Act, to benefit about 14 or 15 employees who are completely out of employment, and will be for 1 year, unless we can get that bill out.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure, if my friend will take that matter up with the chairman of the committee, he will find a very responsive state of mind to hearings on that. I am in agreement with the gentleman, as I stated when he made his 1-minute speech several days ago.

Mr. REED of New York. I was looking over the Chamber and I believe the chairman of the committee is not present on the floor. I wondered whether the committee had been completed.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. It is a rather difficult one, but knowing the competency of the gentleman, I venture to put it. Is it your policy or your purpose to get around so that we adjourn sometime in July early?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course the gentleman is looking many months ahead.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I know the gentleman has a program and I know his efficiency. I wonder if we are going to get it through, because some of us want to make our plans.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am naturally human enough to be pleased with the gentleman's flattery. I can assure the gentleman we will expedite matters as quickly as possible and I am hopeful, without committing myself and looking months ahead, as I say, that we will be through at least by the early part of July.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I want to say to the gentleman that it was not flattery, but just a statement of fact.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is awfully nice of the gentleman.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 24 minutes, p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, January 20, 1949, at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 20, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, in whom we trust, and by whose guidance and grace this Nation was born, bless the Senators of these United States at this important time in history and give them all things needful to the faithful discharge of their responsibilities.

We pray especially today for our President, and also for him who will preside over this Chamber.

Give to them good health for the physical strains of their office, good judgment for the decisions they must make, wisdom beyond their own, and clear understanding for the problems of this difficult hour.

We thank Thee for their humble reliance upon Thee. May they go often to the throne of grace, as we commend them both to Thy loving care and Thy guiding hand. Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present the credentials of the Senator-designate from Kentucky, Hon. GARRETT L. WITHERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follow:

CERTIFICATE OF APPOINTMENT

FRANKFORT, KY., January 17, 1949.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

This is to certify that pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, I, Earle C. Clements, Governor of said Commonwealth, do hereby appoint Hon. GARRETT L. WITHERS a Senator from said Commonwealth to represent the State of Kentucky in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein caused by the resignation of Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY is filled by election as provided by law—said appointment to become effective January 20, 1949.

Witness His Excellency, our Governor, Earle C. Clements, and our seal hereto affixed at Frankfort, Ky., this 17th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1949.

Given under my hand and seal as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky this the 17th day of January in the year of our Lord 1949 and in the one hundred and fifty-seventh year of the Commonwealth.

EARLE C. CLEMENTS,
Governor, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Attest:

[SEAL] GEORGE GLENN HATCHER,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, the Senator-designate is present and ready to take the oath.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-designate from Kentucky will present himself at the desk, the oath of office will be administered to him.

Mr. WITHERS, escorted by Mr. CHAPMAN, advanced to the desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the President pro tempore.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of Tuesday last, the Senate will now proceed to the east front of the Capitol for the inaugural ceremonies, at the conclusion of which it will stand adjourned until Monday next.

At 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m., the Senate, headed by the President pro tempore (KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee) and the Secretary (Leslie L. Biffle), proceeded to the inaugural platform at the east front of the Capitol and took the spaces assigned to them on the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The House of Representatives, headed by the Speaker (SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas) and the Clerk (Ralph R. Roberts) had preceded the Senate to the platform and taken the spaces assigned them on the right of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The governors of the States were escorted to the places assigned them on the right of the inaugural platform.

The Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, with their aides, were escorted to the places assigned them on the right of the inaugural platform.

The diplomatic corps were escorted to the places assigned them on the left of the inaugural platform.

The members of the President's Cabinet were escorted to the places assigned them on the left of the inaugural platform.

The Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, headed by the Marshal, Thomas E. Waggaman, and the Clerk, Charles Elmore Cropley, were escorted to the inaugural platform and took the places assigned them, the Chief Justice being seated immediately to the right and the Associate Justices being seated to the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The President-elect of the United States, Harry S. Truman, of Missouri, and the Vice-President-elect of the United States, Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, were escorted to the inaugural platform by the Secretary of the Senate, and the Joint Committee on Arrangements, consisting of Senator Carl Hayden, chairman; Senator J. Howard McGrath, Senator Kenneth S. Wherry, Representative John McCormack, Representative Harry R. Sheppard, and Representative Charles A. Halleck, the joint committee being headed by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, Joseph C. Duke, and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, Joseph H. Callahan.

The Vice-President-elect was seated immediately to the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

Mrs. Harry S. Truman and Miss Margaret Truman, wife and daughter of the President-elect, with Mrs. Max O. Truitt and David M. Barkley, daughter and son of the Vice-President-elect, and other members of the respective families, were escorted to the places assigned to them on the platform.

PRAYER

Rev. Edward Hughes Pruden, minister, First Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

God of the nations, in whom we live and move and have our being, and from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, we pause at the beginning of this day's historic proceedings to invoke Thy blessing upon this beloved country of ours, and upon all who serve her highest interests.

Grant to Thy servant, the President of the United States, all needed wisdom, health, and strength as he rededicates himself anew today to the high office to which he has been called. May he continue to lead us as he is led by Thee, in the ways that make for domestic tranquillity and international accord.

Bestow upon us, Our Father, the happiness which is reserved for that nation whose God is the Lord. Through Jesus Christ, Our Redeemer, we pray. Amen.

SINGING OF NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mr. Phil Regan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., sang the Star-Spangled Banner, accompanied by the United States Marine Band, led by Maj. William F. Santelmann.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO THE VICE-PRESIDENT-ELECT

Stanley F. Reed, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, administered to the Vice-President-elect the oath of office prescribed by law, which he repeated, as follows:

I, ALBEN W. BARKLEY, solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God.

PRAYER

Rabbi Samuel Thurman, of the United Hebrew Temple, St. Louis, offered the following prayer:

Lord God of all the nations: The hearts and minds of this Nation turn to Thee in this solemn moment in prayer and in gratitude. This Nation, blessed by Thee and dedicated to the holiest conception of Thee as the Father of all mankind, is now being reconsecrated and rededicated in the person of its first citizen, the President of these United States of America. A son of the people, champion of social justice and civic righteousness, he is about to take the oath of his high office.

We pray Thy blessing upon him and his dear ones. Chosen by the people to be their Chief Magistrate, may the people's confidence in him never wane. May he continue to hold the high convictions of righteousness and justice, of truth and peace, which have won for him the people's faith and admiration. Touch him with Thy divine wisdom that he may, with humility, yet also with strength and courage, pursue the high purposes and noble ideals which have moved him to seek and to win the leadership of this Nation. May Thy hand lead and guide him through the many and tortuous paths through which this Nation and all the nations of the world must pass in the years ahead. Keep his heart steadfast and his mind single in the performance of the tasks and duties of his great office, and may this Nation, under his leadership, hold fast to its traditional ideals of freedom and justice for all men. Thus, blessed by Thee and devoted to the holy purposes of Thy will, our Nation shall go forward with unabated strength and unceasing labor in the service of Thee and of humanity, spreading light and liberty to those peoples that walk in darkness and dwell in servitude. By Thy bounty we have become rich and mighty among the nations of the world. O Lord, make us more worthy of all Thy blessings, to the end that both leader and people may continue to find favor in Thine eyes, and so live and serve that Thy glory, Thy majesty, and Thy power may abide with us forever. Amen.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO THE PRESIDENT-ELECT

The Chief Justice of the United States, Fred M. Vinson, administered to the President-elect the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution, which he repeated, as follows:

I, Harry S. Truman, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 5)

Thereupon the President of the United States delivered the following inaugural address:

Mr. Vice President, Mr. Chief Justice, and fellow citizens, I accept with humility the honor which the American people have conferred upon me. I accept it with a resolve to do all that I can for the welfare of this Nation and for the peace of the world.

In performing the duties of my office, I need the help and prayers of every one of you. I ask for your encouragement and for your support. The tasks we face are difficult. We can accomplish them only if we work together.

Each period of our national history has had its special challenges. Those that confront us now are as momentous as any in the past. Today marks the beginning not only of a new administration, but of a period that will be eventful, perhaps decisive, for us and for the world.

It may be our lot to experience, and in a large measure bring about, a major turning point in the long history of the human race. The first half of this century has been marked by unprecedented and brutal attacks on the rights of man, and by the two most frightful wars in history. The supreme need of our time is for men to learn to live together in peace and harmony.

The peoples of the earth face the future with grave uncertainty, composed almost equally of great hopes and great fears. In this time of doubt, they look to the United States as never before for good will, strength, and wise leadership.

It is fitting, therefore, that we take this occasion to proclaim to the world the essential principles of the faith by which we live, and to declare our aims to all peoples.

The American people stand firm in the faith which has inspired this Nation from the beginning. We believe that all men have a right to equal justice under law and equal opportunity to share in the common good. We believe that all men have the right to freedom of thought and expression. We believe that all men are created equal because they are created in the image of God.

From this faith we will not be moved. [Applause.]

The American people desire, and are determined to work for, a world in which all nations and all peoples are free to govern themselves as they see fit and to achieve a decent and satisfying life. Above all else, our people desire, and are determined to work for, peace on earth—a just and lasting peace—based on genuine agreement freely arrived at by equals. [Applause.]

In the pursuant of these aims, the United States and other like-minded nations find themselves directly opposed by a regime with contrary aims and a totally different concept of life.

That regime adheres to a false philosophy which purports to offer freedom, security, and greater opportunity to mankind. Misled by that philosophy, many peoples have sacrificed their liberties only to learn to their sorrow that deceit and mockery, poverty and tyranny, are their reward.

That false philosophy is communism.

Communism is based on the belief that man is so weak and inadequate that he is unable to govern himself, and therefore requires the rule of strong masters.

Democracy is based on the conviction that man has the moral and intellectual capacity, as well as the inalienable right, to govern himself with reason and justice. [Applause.]

Communism subjects the individual to arrest without lawful cause, punishment without trial, and forced labor as a chattel of the state. It decrees what information he shall receive, what art he shall produce, what leaders he shall follow, and what thoughts he shall think.

Democracy maintains that government is established for the benefit of the individual, and is charged with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the individual and his freedom in the exercise of his abilities.

Communism maintains that social wrongs can be corrected only by violence.

Democracy has proved that social justice can be achieved through peaceful change. [Applause.]

Communism holds that the world is so widely divided into opposing classes that war is inevitable.

Democracy holds that free nations can settle differences justly and maintain a lasting peace.

The differences between communism and democracy do not concern the United States alone. People everywhere are coming to realize that what is involved is material well-being, human dignity, and the right to believe in and worship God.

I state these differences, not to draw issues of belief as such, but because the actions resulting from the Communist philosophy are a threat to the efforts of free nations to bring about world recovery and lasting peace.

Since the end of hostilities, the United States has invested its substance and its energy in a great constructive effort to restore peace, stability, and freedom to the world.

We have sought no territory; we have imposed our will on none. We have asked for no privileges we would not extend to others.

We have constantly and vigorously supported the United Nations and related agencies as a means of applying democratic principles to international relations. We have consistently advocated and relied upon peaceful settlement of disputes among nations.

We have made every effort to secure agreement on effective international control of our most powerful weapon, and we have worked steadily for the limitation and control of all armaments.

We have encouraged, by precept and example, the expansion of world trade on a sound and a fair basis.

Almost a year ago, in company with 16 free nations of Europe, we launched the greatest cooperative economic program in history. The purpose of that unprecedented effort is to invigorate and strengthen democracy in Europe, so that the free people of that continent can resume their rightful place in the forefront of civilization and can contribute once more to the security and welfare of the world.

Our efforts have brought new hope to all mankind. We have beaten back despair and defeatism. We have saved a number of countries from losing their liberty. Hundreds of millions of people all over the world now agree with us that we need not have war—that we can have peace. [Applause.]

The initiative is ours.

We are moving on with other nations to build an even stronger structure of international order and justice. We shall have as our partners countries which, no longer solely concerned with the problem of national survival, are now working to improve the standards of living of all their people. We are ready to undertake new projects to strengthen a free world.

In the coming years, our program for peace and freedom will emphasize four major courses of action.

First, we will continue to give unfaltering support to the United Nations and related agencies, and we will continue to search for ways to strengthen their authority and increase their effectiveness. We believe that the United Nations will be strengthened by the new nations which are being formed in lands now advancing toward self-government under democratic principles.

Second, we will continue our programs for world economic recovery.

This means, first of all, that we must keep our full weight behind the European recovery program. We are confident of the success of this major venture in world recovery. We believe that our partners in this effort will achieve the status of self-supporting nations once again.

In addition, we must carry out our plans for reducing the barriers to world trade and increasing its volume. Economic recovery and peace itself depend on increased world trade.

Third, we will strengthen freedom-loving nations against the dangers of aggression.

We are working out with a number of countries a joint agreement designed to strengthen the security of the North Atlantic area. Such an agreement would take the form of a collective defense arrangement within the terms of the United Nations Charter.

We have already established such a defense pact for the Western Hemisphere by the Treaty of Rio de Janeiro.

The primary purpose of these agreements is to provide unmistakable proof of the joint determination of the free countries to resist armed attack from any quarter. Every country participating in these arrangements must contribute all it can to the common defense.

If we can make it sufficiently clear, in advance, that any armed attack affecting our national security will be met with overwhelming force, the armed attack may never occur. [Applause.]

I hope soon to send to the Senate a treaty respecting the North Atlantic security plan.

In addition, we will provide military advice and equipment to free nations which will cooperate with us in the maintenance of peace and security.

Fourth, we must embark on a bold new program for making the benefits of our scientific advances and industrial progress available for the improvement and growth of underdeveloped areas.

More than half the people of the world are living in conditions approaching misery. Their food is inadequate. They are victims of disease. Their economic life is primitive and stagnant. Their poverty is a handicap and a threat both to them and to more prosperous areas.

For the first time in history, humanity possesses the knowledge and skill to relieve the suffering of these people.

The United States is preeminent among the nations in the development of industrial and scientific techniques. The material resources which we can afford to use for the assistance of other peoples are limited. But our imponderable resources in technical knowledge are constantly growing and are inexhaustible.

I believe that we should make available to peace-loving peoples the benefits of our store of technical knowledge in order to help them realize their aspirations for a better life. And, in cooperation with other nations, we should foster capital investment in areas needing development.

Our aim should be to help the free peoples of the world, through their own efforts, to produce more food, more clothing, more materials for housing, and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens.

We invite other countries to pool their technological resources in this undertaking. Their contributions will be warmly welcomed. This should be a cooperative enterprise in which all nations work together through the United Nations and its specialized agencies whenever practicable. It must be a world-wide effort for the achievement of peace, plenty, and freedom. [Applause.]

With the cooperation of business, private capital, agriculture, and labor in this country, this program can greatly increase the industrial activity in other nations and can raise substantially their standards of living.

Such new economic developments must be devised and controlled to benefit the peoples of the areas in which they are established. Guaranties to the investor must be balanced by guaranties in the interest of the people whose resources and whose labor go into these developments. [Applause.]

The old imperialism—exploitation for foreign profit—has no place in our plans. What we envisage is a program of development based on the concepts of democratic fair-dealing.

All countries, including our own, will greatly benefit from a constructive program for the better use of the world's human and natural resources. Experience shows that our commerce with other countries expands as they progress industrially and economically.

Greater production is the key to prosperity and peace. And the key to greater production is a wider and more vigorous application of modern scientific and technical knowledge.

Only by helping the least fortunate of its members to help themselves can the human family achieve the decent, satisfying life that is the right of all people.

Democracy alone can supply the vitalizing force to stir the peoples of the world into triumphant action, not only against their human oppressors, but also against their ancient enemies—hunger, misery, and despair.

On the basis of these four major courses of action we hope to help create the conditions that will lead eventually to personal freedom and happiness for all mankind. [Applause.]

If we are to be successful in carrying out these policies, it is clear that we must have continued prosperity in this country and we must keep ourselves strong. [Applause.]

Slowly but surely we are weaving a world fabric of international security and growing prosperity.

We are aided by all who wish to live in freedom from fear—even by those who live today in fear under their own governments.

We are aided by all who want relief from the lies of propaganda—who desire truth and sincerity.

We are aided by all who desire self-government and a voice in deciding their own affairs.

We are aided by all who long for economic security—for the security and abundance that men in free societies can enjoy.

We are aided by all who desire freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom to live their own lives for useful ends.

Our allies are the millions who hunger and thirst after righteousness.

In due time, as our stability becomes manifest, as more and more nations come to know the benefits of democracy and to participate in growing abundance, I believe that those countries which now oppose us will abandon their delusions and join with the free nations of the world in a just settlement of international differences. [Applause.]

Events have brought our American democracy to new influence and new responsibilities. They will test our courage, our devotion to duty, and our concept of liberty.

But I say to all men, what we have achieved in liberty, we will surpass in greater liberty.

Steadfast in our faith in the Almighty, we will advance toward a world where man's freedom is secure.

To that end we will devote our strength, our resources, and our firmness of resolve. With God's help, the future of mankind will be assured in a world of justice, harmony, and peace. [Applause.]

BENEDICTION

Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, pronounced the following benediction:

Blessed art Thou, Lord God of our fathers, and worthy to be praised and glorified forever.

Stretch forth Thy hand, O Lord, in fruitful blessing upon our President, our Vice President, the Members of our Congress, our judges and magistrates, and all those who, by our will, are entrusted with the well-being and security of our country, so that by Thy aid they may be able to discharge their duties of office with wisdom and prudence and justice.

Great indeed are our faults and numberless our needs, but complete is our trust in Thee, the God of all consolation, into whose hands we commit ourselves with faith and docility. Bless the people of our country that they may be governed by Thy law and walk in the ways of Thy commandments. Endow them with grace to bear one another's burdens in that generous spirit which befits men in true brotherhood under Thee, the common Father of all men.

Send forth Thy Holy Spirit in the fullness of His gifts to bless us with wisdom to perceive the ways of Thy holy will; with understanding to enlighten the darkness of our minds; with counsel to guide us unfailingly in the path of rectitude; with fortitude to sustain and strengthen us; with knowledge to instruct our ignorance; with piety to fructify in good works; and with reverent fear to deliver us from evil.

Multiply, O Lord, upon this Nation the manifold marks of Thy divine approval and benediction, set up, as it is, like a sign and symbol among the nations of the earth. Bless the land with fertile soil to bring forth the harvests that nourish us and feed the hungry mouths of the unfortunate who look to us for the necessities of life. Erkindle in our people the spirit of charity for the many whom poverty and misery have reduced to conditions unworthy of the dignity of man. Awaken in the souls of all who call Thee Father a hunger and thirst after social justice and fraternal charity.

Grant, O Lord, peace in our days, peace in our land, and peace among the nations, to the end that the rainbow of peace and reconciliation may enfold under its serene light all peoples of the earth with the graces and blessings of tranquillity. Amen.

At 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m. the President and Vice President of the United States, escorted by the Joint Committee on Arrangements, retired from the platform, followed by the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the other distinguished guests who had been invited to witness the ceremonies.

ADJOURNMENT

After the conclusion of the inaugural ceremonies (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate, without returning to its Chamber, under the order entered on January 18 instant, stood in adjournment until Monday, January 24, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 20, 1949

The House met at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, we praise Thee for the marvelous history of our Nation and for those institutions which are the glory of our democracy.

In this historic moment, we seek Thy divine guidance to direct our President and Vice President. Preserve their health in the days to come; with increasing faith in the right, may they be fully prepared to enter upon their labors. We ask in Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 18, 1949, was read and approved.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a brief announcement for the benefit of all Members. The Chair announces to the House that we will leave here in a body to go out on the official platform for the inaugural ceremonies. In order to get by the police and the marines it will be necessary for each Member to display the official ticket in order to secure his seat on the platform. The seats to be occupied by Members of the Senate and House of Representatives have no cover and it is advisable for Members to take with them their overcoats and hats.

The Chair also desires to state that pursuant to House Resolution 55, at the conclusion of the ceremonies at the east front of the Capitol, the House will stand adjourned until noon on Monday next. The Speaker, preceded by the Clerk, will head the procession, and the Members of the House will form in double column following them.

Thereupon, at 11:35 o'clock a. m., the Members of the House, preceded by the Speaker and the Clerk, proceeded to the east front of the Capitol.

ADJOURNMENT

At the conclusion of the inaugural ceremonies (at 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, without returning to its Chamber, pursuant to House Resolution 55 stood in adjournment until Monday, January 24, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Today, O Lord, as the Members of the Senate pause in this moment of prayer, we unite our petitions for Thy blessing upon Thy servant who, in his new capacity, presides over this body. We thank Thee for his long years of devoted public service, for the testimony of his life and the inspiration of his example.

May he never feel lonely in this chair, but always be aware of Thy hand upon him and Thy spirit with him.

When differences arise, as they will, may Thy servants be not disturbed at being misunderstood, but rather be disturbed at not understanding.

May Thy will be done here, and may Thy program be carried out, above party and personality, beyond time and circumstance, for the good of America and the peace of the world. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 18, and Thursday, January 20, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma asked and obtained consent that his colleague [Mr. KERR] be excused from attendance in the Senate today because of his inability to return to Washington from Oklahoma, due to bad weather.

Mr. CAPEHART asked and obtained leave to be absent from the Senate until Friday of the present week.

REMARKS OF THE VICE PRESIDENT ON ASSUMING THE CHAIR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senate begins the transaction of business, I ask its indulgence for a few moments to respond to the very gracious remarks made by Members of the Senate on last Tuesday from both sides of the aisle upon the occasion of my retirement as a Member. I could not trust myself on that day to respond appropriately, because, as I have said frequently, I did not abandon, without regret, that seat upon the aisle in the front row after occupying it for 12 years. But I do appreciate the very generous remarks, not only made by Members of the Senate in public, but similar remarks that have been made to me in private upon the occasion of my departure from the Senate as a Member, and the assumption of my duties as its Presiding Officer.

I recall that in 1913, when Vice President Marshall from this very rostrum took the oath of office, as was then the custom, he made a little speech, after announcing that his reason for it was that he was entering upon a 4-year period of silence. I do not put myself precisely in that position, because I shall probably have to adjust myself gradually to the fact that I am not a Member of the Senate, and it might not surprise the Senate if some day I should thoughtlessly walk down from the rostrum and begin to debate some problem, upon which occasion I would expect to be called promptly to order. But I do appreciate, of course, the magnitude and the unanimity of the courtesies which have been extended to me as a Member of the Senate of the United States by all Members, regardless of their party and regardless of their States.

I have often doubted, and I do not hesitate to say that I doubt yet, whether there is any promotion to a higher office than a United States Senator that can be regarded as such, or to a role that can be regarded as more important than the role played by a Member of the United States Senate. We frequently refer to the Senate as the greatest deliberative body in the world. I have sometimes, in my impatience at what may have seemed to be too lengthy debate, referred to it as the most deliberative body in the world. But be that as it may, I believe that the United States Senate—and I say it with due apologies to any other legislative body—is the greatest deliberative body, because there is deliberation here, there is the right to speak; there is the right to be represented; there is the right to express one's views, however much they may disagree with the views of other Members of the Senate or with the people outside the Senate. So that to me membership in the Senate constitutes one of the supreme honors that the American people, through any State, can confer upon one of their citizens.

While it is true that every Senator represents the State which has chosen him, and in the very nature of things is interested in the problems which affect his State, in a real and a broader sense every Senator is a Senator of the United States. Though chosen by a single State, every vote he casts here for or against legislation which is general in its scope affects the people of every other State, as well as the people of his own State. So that it is a great thing not only to be chosen by a State as its ambassador to this great body, but it is a great thing to feel that while in that capacity we are Members here, we are also Members of the United States Senate for the country at large. So I experienced considerable regret in dissociating myself from this body as a Member.

I will be hanging around for 4 years, and I wish not only to welcome the cooperation of every Member of the Senate, but I invite the cooperation and the sympathetic good will of every Member of this body, regardless of politics. I can assure you that not only personally but officially I will accord to every Member of the Senate, regardless of the State from which he comes, and regardless of his political inclinations, that same degree of good will and cooperation which I hope to receive from you.

I wish also to say not only to the new Members who are just coming into this body, but to the older Members also, that if in my capacity of Presiding Officer of the Senate I can be of service to you in a legislative way, in helping you to solve your problems, I shall be most happy to do so.

While I am on that phase of what I am saying I wish also to say that, while the Constitution prescribes only one duty for the Vice President of the United States, and that is to be the Presiding Officer of the Senate, I should like the Senate to know, and the Congress to know, and the administration and the Government to know, and the people to know, that if at any time I may be of service to the Congress, to the administration, of course, and to the Government and to the American people beyond the mere technical duties of presiding over the Senate, I shall be happy to be available for any such service as any branch of the Government, or both branches of the Congress, may feel I can render.

So let me again thank all the Members who are here today, and all those who have been here while I have been a Member of this body, for the unanimous courtesy and consideration of which I have been the object. You have been tolerant of my mistakes, you have been patient with my shortcomings, and I look forward to a season of cooperation, of sympathetic understanding and work, nonpartisan work in most instances, I am sure, because most of our problems here are not partisan, unless we seek to make them so. I look forward to 4 years of happy, cooperative, understanding service to the American people, and I wish for each one of you that same degree of success and the contentment and satisfaction with your work that I hope to receive from my own. [Applause, Senators rising.]

MEMBER OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

The VICE PRESIDENT. Due to the shift in the representation of the majority and minority on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, there is a vacancy, to which the Chair appoints the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

MEMBER OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC REPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to announce the appointment of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to the vacancy on the Joint Committee on the Economic Report caused by the retirement of former Senator Ball, of Minnesota.

ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Under Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice President of the United States from the States of Florida, New York, and Wisconsin, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred, as indicated:

REPORT ON PERSHING HALL MEMORIAL FUND

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report covering transactions for account of the Pershing Hall Memorial Fund, fiscal year 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Armed Services.

WITHDRAWAL OF REQUEST FOR COMPLIANCE UNDER ALLOCATION OF CERTAIN STEEL PRODUCTS

A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, withdrawing his request for compliance to the Maridon Manufacturing Co., Inc., of New York, under the voluntary plan for the allocation of steel products for warm air heating equipment for residential housing (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXTENSION TO COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OF PROVISIONS OF ARMED FORCES LEAVE ACT

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey the provisions of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT ON VALUATION OF PROPERTIES OF SHELL OIL CO., INC., PRODUCTS PIPE-LINE DEPARTMENT

A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a copy of the final valuation of properties of the Shell Oil Co., Inc., Products Pipe-line Department, Valuation Docket No. 1283 (with an accompanying document); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the sixty-second annual report of that Commission, for the period November 1, 1947, to October 31, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT ON CONTRACTS NEGOTIATED BY NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

A letter from the executive secretary, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on contracts negotiated by that Committee, for the period July 1, 1948, to December 31, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Armed Services.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator, Veterans' Administration, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to relieve certain employees of the Veterans' Administration from financial liability for certain overpayments (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS DURING MORNING HOUR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senate embarks on the routine morning business, the Chair wishes to make an announcement, and he wishes to make it now, in advance, so that no Senator can possibly construe the announcement or the ruling as being applicable only to him.

In the routine business of the Senate, almost from time immemorial, there has been what is known as the morning hour. The morning hour comes only following an adjournment of the Senate. It does not come following a recess of the Senate, because under immemorial custom a recess of the Senate is different from an adjournment, in that when the Senate reassembles after a recess it is still operating in the same legislative day in which it recessed. Therefore there is no morning hour after a recess, but only after an adjournment.

In order that the routine business of the morning hour may be accomplished with dispatch and promptness, a certain order has been laid down in the rules for the transaction of such business. The first order of business is the presentation of petitions and memorials; next come reports of committees; then the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, followed by the submission of concurrent and other resolutions.

Ordinarily it does not take very long to go through the morning business. Because of the fact that many Senators come to the Chamber for the purpose of presenting petitions and memorials, submitting reports, or introducing bills and joint resolutions, or other resolutions, the rules provide that there shall be no debate and no speeches on any subject during the consideration of morning business. Of course, after the morning business is concluded, so long as there remains a part of the morning hour, debate is permissible. The Chair is sure that all Senators will realize that it is not quite fair to Senators who have come to the Chamber in order to take part in the transaction of morning business to be required to wait until speeches are made, either on a subject which may be before the Senate or on any other subject.

Therefore the Chair desires to announce that, without any Senator making a point of order to that effect, the Chair expects to enforce the rule against the making of speeches of any kind by any Senator during transaction of morning business, in order that the routine business of the Senate may be promptly dispatched.

Furthermore, the Chair points out that it has become a habit, during the part of the morning hour set aside for the presentation of petitions and memorials, for Senators to rise and ask unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce bills or submit resolutions. Ordinarily it requires only 5 or 10 minutes to reach the order for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. Therefore the Chair feels that it would be in the interest of orderly procedure for Members of the Senate not to ask to introduce bills out of order during the order of business for the presentation of petitions and memorials, but to wait until the Senate reaches that part of the morning hour set aside for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

With that brief comment upon what the Chair hopes will be a cooperative effort to observe the rules of the Senate for the benefit of all Senators, the Senate will now enter upon the morning business. Before that is done, the Chair would like to urge new Senators—and some old ones—to study the rules of the Senate. They should take the Senate Manual home with them and study it. It has been frequently said that the Senate has no rules. It does have rules. It has specific rules set out in the book of rules. It has other rules which have come down by interpretation, tradition, and custom. It is almost as difficult to master all the rules as to master the decisions of the supreme court of any State. A Senator must work his way into them by daily attendance upon the sessions and by observation. It will be helpful to new Senators to study the book of rules carefully so that they will know what their rights are, and what the rights of other Senators are.

The first order of business is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A letter in the nature of a petition from Josef Geiger, of Milwaukee, Wis., relating to the atomic bomb (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Armed Services.

A letter in the nature of a petition from Mary I. Riley, of the United States, relating to rent control; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from Gordon Griswold, president, National Advisory Board Council on Grazing, Salt Lake City, Utah, favoring the enactment of emergency legislation for the relief of the storm-ridden States in the West; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

A letter in the nature of a petition from Percy Bohlen Gifford, of Los Angeles, Calif., relating to rent control (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from Omar Brown, supervisor, St. Thomas, V. I., relating to the election of Resident Commissioner of the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

A letter in the nature of a petition from W. J. Fiddy, of Norfolk, Va., relating to the registration of lobbyists; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a resolution urging a congressional investigation of lobbying, adopted by the executive council of the International Association of Machinists. Following this resolution, I ask that there be printed a letter sent by President Truman to the International Association of Machinists, commending the resolution and affirming the desirability of such an investigation.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ADOPTED UNANIMOUSLY BY EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS, IN REGULAR SESSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Whereas certain special interests used their tremendous resources to finance high-powered lobbying activities which confused the Members of the Eightieth Congress and deceived them as to the attitude of the majority of the citizens of this country; and

Whereas there is ample evidence already that these same groups are preparing an even larger assault on the Eighty-first Congress in a last desperate effort to thwart the will of the majority and to block President Truman's legislative program; and

Whereas charges were made on the floor of the Eightieth Congress that manufacturers spent $100,000,000 to put over the Taft-Hartley bill, and that charge never has been refuted; and

Whereas the people of this country, as well as the Members of the Eighty-first Congress, are entitled to the full facts concerning the lobbying objectives, the identity and interests of individual contributors, and lobbying methods of the National Association of Manufacturers, the Committee for Constitutional Government, the National Physicians Committee, the National Association of Electric Companies, the National Association of Home Builders, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the Association of American Railroads, and other lobbies, which while less widely publicized are working no less assiduously for special favors for their special interests from the Congress; and

Whereas a thorough investigation of such activity by a joint congressional committee would build a foundation of information from which adequate regulatory legislation could be framed and at the same time acquaint the people of this country with some of the pressures to which their elected representatives in Congress are subjected; and

Whereas the spotlight of publicity on these lobbies will not harm any legitimate representation of any group in Washington: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the executive council of the International Association of Machinists respectfully urges that a thorough investigation of all lobbying activities be initiated by a joint congressional committee as the first order of business by the Eighty-first Congress after it has organized; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this request be transmitted to President Truman and to leaders of the Eighty-first Congress, including Vice-President-elect ALBEN BARKLEY, and Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, SCOTT LUCAS, and FRANCIS J. MYERS, and Representatives SAM RAYBURN and JOHN MCCORMACK.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 30, 1948.

Mr. ERIC PETERSON,
General Secretary-Treasurer, International Association of Machinists, Ninth Street and Mount Vernon Place NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PETERSON: Thank you for your telegram of November 20 transmitting the text of the resolution adopted by your executive council urging a congressional investigation of lobbying activities during the Eightieth Congress.

I think your organization has rendered a distinct public service in taking a stand on this matter.

While it is up to the Congress to determine the subjects which it will investigate, I feel sure that a thorough investigation of lobbying activities would have a very salutary effect, and I would be glad to see such an investigation undertaken.

Sincerely,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

RESOLUTIONS OF WISCONSIN STATE GRANGE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received today a copy of several resolutions adopted by the annual convention of the Wisconsin State Grange. Representing as it does the views of many farmers in my own and other States, I feel that these Grange resolutions should be given the most careful attention.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the text of these resolutions presented to me by Mr. William E. Seffern, master of the Wisconsin State Grange, be appropriately referred and printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, they will be printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas there is a widespread misunderstanding among business and commercial groups in regard to the activities of cooperatives and their place in our economic system. Cooperatives should and do operate within the framework of the competitive system; they do not and are not designed to replace private enterprise. Their principal difference from other types of private enterprise is the distribution of earnings or losses. We hold that the self-help cooperative way of doing business should continue to be recognized as a contractual arrangement wherein the net earnings or losses of the business legally belong to the cooperative member and therefore be taxed in his hands only.

"We, therefore, insist that the present tax status of cooperatives be preserved. We will oppose any effort, State or National, which would tend to destroy this position through legislation or otherwise."

"PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS AGAINST OLEOMARGARINE DECEPTION

"Consumers have a right to buy either oleomargarine or butter; consumers also have a right, by using their God-given sense of sight, to know at all times and in all places which product they are getting.

"We insist that until such time as the oleomargarine industry ceases its present practice of consumer confusion and deception, that until such time as oleomargarine is offered for sale and consumption in some distinctive color other than yellow, we will emphatically oppose any change in present oleomargarine legislation."

To the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

"Whereas the R. F. D. is still carried on as in the horse and buggy days when it was necessary to limit mileage; and

"Whereas farmers today are operating with a shortage of help and it is a handicap to make several trips a day to a mail box located at a distance from the farm; and

"Whereas all are paying their proportionate share of the tax and are entitled to the same service: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the State and National Grange go on record favoring rural free delivery to every farm gateway, and do all in their power to get action to that effect. And we further recommend that the rates on second-class mail be increased."

---

To the Committee on Appropriations:

"Whereas the REA has been of vital service to our rural people; and

"Whereas there is still a great need of extended service of the REA: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Wisconsin State Grange support legislation for adequate authority, appropriations, and loan funds for REA in order that unmet needs be fulfilled as fast as practical."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Albert J. Loveland, of Iowa, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS TO FILE A REPORT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senate will not be in session tomorrow or Wednesday, not until Thursday, and then will adjourn over until the following Monday, I wish to ask that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which will meet tomorrow, may be permitted to file a report during the recess on the nomination of Mr. James E. Webb to be Under Secretary of State, so that the nomination may go to the Executive Calendar and be considered at the Thursday session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

RENT CONTROL

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement by me, together with a summary of the bill, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement, together with the summary, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 600) to extend certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement and summary presented by Mr. MAYBANK was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAYBANK

This bill extends rent control for 2 years beyond the March 31, 1949, termination date of the present act. In addition to extending the period of rent control, it extends coverage to several types of accommodations not now under rent control and corrects weaknesses in the present act. It also gives the Housing Expediter authority to recontrol areas previously decontrolled.

Brought back under rent control under this bill are the following:

1. Hotel accommodations not rented for transient occupancy on June 30, 1947. This will bring back under rent control some 500,000 hotel apartments rented to permanent guests as distinguished from transients.

2. Rental units covered by 15-percent voluntary leases. The bill provides that housing accommodations with present 15-percent leases shall be under rent control and it recontrols housing accommodations on which such leases were previously terminated, but at the lease rent. The right to enter into such leases is not renewed.

3. Accommodations which were not rented for 24 months during the period from February 1, 1945, to March 30, 1948. Such units are exempt from rent control under the present act. This bill brings them under control.

Under this bill, conversions are no longer automatically decontrolled, as in the present act. Converted housing accommodations remain under control until the Housing Expediter finds that the conversion resulted in additional, self-contained family units.

The bill authorizes the Housing Expediter to bring back under rent control areas previously decontrolled.

Provisions in the bill for strengthening rent control include the following:

1. The right of the Expediter to sue for treble damages for overcharges on failure of the tenant to do so. At present only a tenant has such right. In practice, few tenants have exercised their right from fear of being evicted.

2. Control over evictions is restored to the Housing Expediter. Under the present act, a tenant is compelled to go into court to protect his rights if he believes the eviction to be illegal. Under this bill, the Housing Expediter would be better able to prevent illegal evictions.

3. Criminal sanctions and use of the administrative subpena by the Housing Expediter. Criminal sanctions are intended for use against repeated and willful violators who apparently have little respect for civil penalties. By use of administrative subpena, the Expediter will be able to obtain additional information essential for better enforcement of the act and regulations.

This bill continues in effect the local advisory boards and their powers to make recommendations to the Housing Expediter, but it provides that if the Housing Expediter disapproves a board recommendation, appeal may be taken through complaint filed by the board in the Emergency Court of Appeals. Under the present act, such appeal is automatic.

While the bill extends rent control to the close of March 31, 1951, it authorizes termination of the act by Presidential proclamation or congressional concurrent resolution if the emergency is declared over prior to that date.

Veterans' preference is also continued to March 31, 1951. As before, it provides that veterans of World War II are to be given first opportunity to rent or purchase new houses or apartments not built for owner-occupancy.

SUMMARY OF PROPOSED BILL TO EXTEND RENT CONTROL TO THE CLOSE OF MARCH 31, 1951

Section 1 provides that the act may be cited as the Housing and Rent Act of 1949.

Section 2 provides for the continuance to the close of March 31, 1951, of veterans' preference for the sale and rental of housing accommodations.

Section 201 (a) limits decontrol of hotel accommodations to those used exclusively on June 30, 1947, for transient occupancy.

Section 201 (b) provides for the decontrol of future conversions only on order of the Housing Expediter and recontrols housing accommodations which for 24 months during the period from February 1, 1945, to the enactment of the Housing and Rent Act of 1948 were not rented.

Section 202 provides for the transfer without reimbursement of the cabinets containing rent-control records as well as the records themselves to local officials on the termination of national rent control.

Section 203 (a) extends the Office of the Housing Expediter to the close of March 31, 1951.

Section 203 (b) provides that housing accommodations with present 15-percent leases shall be under rent control and recontrols housing accommodations on which 15-percent leases were previously terminated.

Section 203 (c) provides that the Housing Expediter furnish local boards with reporting services for public hearings.

Section 203 (d) provides for review of nonapproved local board recommendations by complaint filed in the emergency court of appeals by the local board.

Section 203 (e) eliminates cost ceilings for reporting services.

Section 203 (f) extends the provisions of title II to the close of March 31, 1951, but authorizes the termination of the act by Presidential proclamation or congressional concurrent resolution if the emergency is declared over.

Section 203 (g) provides maximum rent standards for recontrolled units.

Section 204 provides for treble-damage suits to be instituted by the Housing Expediter on failure of the tenant to do so.

Section 205 provides for criminal sanctions and the use of the administrative subpena by the Housing Expediter.

Section 206 provides for the regulation of evictions by the Housing Expediter.

Section 301 provides that no person shall be required to offer any housing accommodations for rent.

Section 302 provides for the reestablishment of maximum rents.

Section 303 is the separability clause.

Section 304 provides for the act to become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which it is enacted.

AMENDMENT OF HOSPITAL AND HEALTH CENTER CONSTRUCTION ACT

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Hospital and Health Center Construction Act, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Alabama will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 614) to amend the Hospital Survey and Construction Act (title VI of the Public Health Service Act) to extend its duration and provide greater financial assistance in the construction of hospitals, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. HILL (for himself, Mr. TAFT, Mr. ELLENDER, and Mr. SMITH of New Jersey) was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement presented by Mr. HILL was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HILL

The bill would amend the Hospital and Health Center Construction Act as follows:

First, increase the amount of Federal aid from $75,000,000 a year to $150,000,000 a year.

Second, extend the time for the operation of the act an additional 5 years or making a total of at least 8 years.

Third, place the Federal allotment for the individual hospital or health center project on the same variable need basis as the overall allotment to the particular State. Under the act the individual project today receives 33⅓ percent of the cost from Federal funds. Under the amendment the 33⅓ percent would be increased in communities of low income and the Federal contribution to individual projects would vary between 33⅓ percent and 70 percent. There would be no increase in the over-all allotment to the particular State. The provision in the amendment for the increase of Federal allocation to the individual State is the same as it was when the original act was passed by the Senate.

Fourth, provide $1,200,000 in Federal funds for aid to States, political subdivisions, universities, hospitals, and other public and private nonprofit institutions or organizations for projects for the conduct of research, experiments, or demonstrations relating to the development, utilization, and coordination of hospital services, facilities, and resources.

Fifth, provide Federal funds to aid States in the administration of the State plan for hospitals and health centers.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, and so forth.

By way of explanation in connection with the bill I send forward copy of a letter I have addressed to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, and I ask that this letter and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill, together with the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 636) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the regulation of noncertificated air carriers and contract air carriers, and for other puposes, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after paragraph (25) thereof the following:

"(25A) 'Noncertificated air carrier' means any air carrier other than an air carrier holding a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued under the provisions of this chapter."

SEC. 2. Section 401 (a) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting immediately preceding the first sentence thereof the following:

"Except as provided in section 417 of this title."

SEC. 3. Title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after section 416 thereof the following new section:

"417. (a) No person shall engage in air transportation as a noncertificated air carrier unless there is in force a license issued by the Board authorizing such noncertificated air carrier to engage in such transportation: Provided, That if a noncertificated air carrier is engaged in air transportation under a letter of registration or exemption issued to such noncertificated air carrier under the provisions of this chapter, or any order, rule, or regulation thereunder, on January 1, 1949, such noncertificated air carrier may continue so to engage in air transportation for 120 days after said date, and thereafter until such time as the board shall pass upon an application for a license for such transportation if within said 120 days such noncertificated air carrier files such application as provided herein.

"(b) Application for a license shall be made in writing to the board and shall be so verified, shall be in such form and contain such information, and shall be accompanied by such proof of service upon such interested persons, as the Board shall by regulation require.

"(c) Upon the filing of any such application, the board shall give due notice thereof to the public by posting a notice of such application in the office of the Secretary of the Board and to such other persons as the board by regulation may determine. Any interested person may file with the Board a protest or memorandum of opposition to or in support of the issuance of a license. Such application shall be set for public hearing, and the Board shall dispose of such application as speedily as possible.

"(d) The Board shall issue a license authorizing the whole or any part of the transportation covered by the application, if it finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able to properly perform such transportation, otherwise such application shall be denied. The Board may issue a license to a noncertificated air carrier with reasonable limitations of duration if it finds that such limitations are required by the public convenience and necessity; but where the application was made for a license of unlimited duration the applicant may reject such limited license if such right of rejection is exercised within such reasonable time as the Board may by regulation determine.

"(e) If any applicant who makes application for a licence within 120 days after the effective date of this section shall show that, from January 1, 1948, until the effective date of this section, it, or its predecessor in interest, was a noncertificated air carrier holding a letter of registration hereunder, the Board, upon proof of such fact only, shall issue a license to such applicant. Such license shall be limited to the operations shown to have been conducted by the applicant between said dates, and such license may be further limited to the types of service, classes of traffic, and the commodity or commodities carried by the applicant while so operating.

"(f) Each license issued under this section shall specify the points between which operation as a noncertificated air carrier is to be authorized, the nature of the traffic and scope of the business to be authorized thereby. There shall be attached to the exercise of the privileges granted by such license, or amendment thereto, such reasonable terms, conditions. and limitations as the public interest may require, except that no term, condition, or limitation shall restrict the right of the noncertificated air carrier to change or add to its equipment or facilities for performing the authorized transportation as the development of the business and the demands of the public may require: Provided, That no license issued under this section shall authorize the holder thereof to operate or to hold out, directly or indirectly, that it operates: (1) More than three round-trip flights per week between the same two points or more than four one-way flights per week between the same two points; (2) more than a total of four one-way flights and round-trip flights per week between the same two points; (3) in scheduled air transportation.

"(g) Each license shall be effective from the date specified therein, and shall continue in effect until suspended or revoked as hereinafter provided, or until the Board shall certify that operation thereunder has ceased, or if issued for a limited period of time under subsection (d) of this section, shall continue in effect until the expiration thereof, unless prior to the date of expiration, such license shall be suspended or revoked as provided herein, or the Board shall certify that operations thereunder have ceased: Provided, That if any service authorized by a license is not inaugurated within such period, not less than 90 days, after the date of the authorization as shall be fixed by the Board, or if, for a period of 90 days or such other period as may be designated by the Board, any such service is not operated, the Board may by order, entered after notice and hearing, direct that such license shall thereupon cease to be effective to the extent of such service.

"(h) The Board, upon petition or complaint or upon its own initiative, after notice and hearing, may alter, amend, modify, or suspend any such license, in whole or in part, if the public convenience and necessity so require, or may revoke any such license, in whole or in part, for intentional failure to comply with any provision of this subchapter or any order, rule, or regulation issued hereunder, or any term, condition, or limitation of such license: Provided, That no such license shall be revoked unless the holder thereof fails to comply, within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Board, with an order of the Board commanding obedience to the provision, or to the order (other than an order issued in accordance with this proviso), rule, regulation, term, condition, or limitation found by the Board to have been violated. Any interested person may file with the Board a protest or memorandum in support of or in opposition to the alteration, amendment, modification, suspension, or revocation of a license.

"(i) No license may be transferred unless such transfer is approved by the Board as being consistent with the public interest.

"(j) No license shall confer any proprietary, property, or exclusive right in the use of any air space, civil airway, landing area, or air-navigation facility."

The letter presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 24, 1949.

Mr. JOSEPH J. O'CONNELL, Jr.,
Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board,
Commerce Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The notice of the Civil Aeronautics Board dated December 10, 1948, with reference to its proposed amendment and partial repeal of section 292.1 of its economic regulations governing small and large irregular air carriers has been called to my attention. I am submitting herewith for your consideration my views with respect to the legality of the proposed regulation, and certain questions of policy involved therein.

First of all, permit me to point out that on August 30, 1946, prior to the promulgation of the existing section 292.1, I addressed a communication to Mr. James M. Landis, the then Chairman of the Board, in which I stated as follows:

"Being the principal author of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as well as its sponsor throughout its whole legislative history, I may be presumed to have a clear idea of the legislative intent of Congress in enacting the law.

"I wish to state unequivocally and unalterably that the act never, at any time in its history, contemplated the economic regulation of nonscheduled or fixed base operators. No representatives of such persons appeared at any of the hearings either in favor of or in opposition to the bill nor were they requested to do so. Moreover, there is not to be found a single reference to such operators in the whole legislative history of the act. The only mention of nonscheduled operations in the entire act is in section 416 (b) (2), and that provision was inserted solely to assist the small operators who continuously held themselves out as scheduled operators but because of financial or other difficulties were often unable to meet their scheduled commitments. It was in no sense intended to bring the nonscheduled operators within the purview of the statute (83 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 7079).

"Admittedly, all airmen and all aircraft are subject to the safety requirements but no parallel provision is made in the so-called economic sections of the act. Rather, the act applies its economic sections only to carriers engaged in air transportation, which term, by a series of definitions in the act, means the carriage by aircraft of persons or property as a common carrier for compensation or hire or the carriage of mail in interstate commerce. The use of the words 'common carrier' in section 1 (21) without further definition is sufficient demonstration that the economic regulations promulgated by the Board do not, and cannot, extend to private and contract carriers by aircraft as long as they are operating on a nonscheduled basis, regardless of whether or not such carriers engaged in interstate, overseas, or foreign commerce.

"It has often been charged that the Board is 'air-line minded' and if this is true I wish to compliment the members sincerely because there is no doubt in my mind that the intent of the act was to provide regulation of the air lines and the Board is to be congratulated for recognizing and accepting its proper sphere of activity. On the other hand, if the Board now seeks to enlarge its activity without legislative authority, I will condemn it and oppose any such assumption with all the force at my command."

Notwithstanding my communication and the clearly expressed intent of the Congress to cover only scheduled air lines in the legislation encompassed within the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, the Board proceeded to promulgate regulations to cover and govern the nonscheduled air carrier industry.

I have not been unaware of the tremendous development of the nonscheduled air carrier industry in this country since World War II. I am aware that there are approximately 5,000 such nonscheduled operators, and I am further aware that they have developed a large and substantial business. Many of these operators received their initial training in the pilot training programs which I sponsored.

It is my belief that if civil aviation in this country is to grow and fill the needs of our people, nonscheduled operators must be encouraged to develop and expand their business in a safe and proper manner. The nonscheduled industry of this country represents civil aviation's greatest potential growth; but that growth must be properly regulated in the public interest.

I have already introduced my bill to revise and rewrite the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and bring it up to date. In addition to the contract carrier provisions of that bill I have been for some time considering a draft of an amendment specifically covering all noncertificated air carriers. This amendment I propose to introduce within a few days, though I am not sure I have solved certain technical problems of draftsmanship which are involved. My bill S. 1 and this proposed amendment will, for the first time, provide legislative authority for the Civil Aeronautics Board to regulate the nonscheduled aviation industry of this country. I do think that the Civil Aeronautics Board should, in the meantime, stay its hand and give the Congress, the only body legally authorized to speak, an opportunity to act on this subject. The reason I did not include the full amendment covering all nonscheduled operations in my original bill was that I have not heretofore felt that such legislation was necessary, as I believed for some time that the noncontract phases of nonscheduled operation should be allowed a free and unfettered opportunity to develop. But I now believe that the Congress should fully cover the complete air carrier field and express its policies on the subject, so my proposed amendment is designed to take care of this situation.

The latest draft of my proposed amendment is enclosed. I shall appreciate any comments or suggestions which the Board would like to make; and I hope the Board will come before the committee when hearings are scheduled and express its views fully. To cover such a varied industry as the nonscheduled air carriers of this country in broad language is quite difficult. You will note that my proposed amendment sets up a licensing system and that it vests rather broad authority in the Board. The full mechanics of what I have in mind may require a much more detailed bill.

In view of my position on the need for new legislation to cover the nonscheduled air carriers, I will not comment in detail on the provisions of the proposed regulation. As author of the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, I do point out that the failure to continue the use of the "letters of registration" now used by the existing regulation appears to be an attempt to get away from the provisions and protections of that act. I do not believe the Board would intend such a result.

I believe that all possible action should be taken to assure safe operations by nonscheduled air carriers. This means sound economic regulations as well as proper safety regulations. Since the Congress in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 covered only safety regulations in a comprehensive way, the Congress should now fill in the void which exists in the economic regulations for nonscheduled air carriers.

Kindest regards and all good wishes.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN.

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF CERTAIN JUDGES

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to increase the salaries of certain judges of the United States. In connection with this bill I ask that an attached memorandum, with footnotes, may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 637) to increase the salaries of judges of the United States, introduced by Mr. MCCARRAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The memorandum presented by Mr. MCCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM AS TO THE NECESSITY FOR INCREASE IN THE SALARIES OF UNITED STATES JUDGES

The purpose and effect of the proposed legislation is to provide for a $5,000 increase in the annual salary of each member of the Federal judiciary, except in respect to that of the Chief Justice of the United States for whom is proposed an increase of $9,500. The proposed legislation applies in both terms and effect to the salaries of the Chief Justice and of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, of the judges of the United States courts of appeals, of the judges of the United States Court of Claims, of the judges of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, of the judges of the United States district courts, of the judges of the United States Customs Court, of the judges of the district courts of the Virgin Islands and of Alaska, and of the judges of the Tax Court of the United States. The proposed legislation applies in effect, although not in terms, to the salary of the judge of the District Court of the Canal Zone for the reason that the statutes provide that the judge of that court shall receive "the same salary as is allowed to United States district judges.[1] The present salaries, which the proposed legislation would supersede, were established by the act of July 31, 1946 (60 Stat. 716). The salaries fixed by that act and the salaries to be established by the proposed legislation compare as follows:

| | Present salaries | Proposed salaries |
|---|---|---|
| Chief Justice of the United States | $25,500 | $35,000 |
| Associate Justices of the Supreme Court | 25,000 | 30,000 |
| Judges of the United States courts of appeals | 17,500 | 22,500 |
| Judges of the United States Court of Claims | 17,500 | 22,500 |
| Judges of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals | 17,500 | 22,500 |
| Judges of the United States district courts | 15,000 | 20,000 |
| Chief judge of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia | 15,500 | 20,500 |
| Judges of the United States Customs Court | 15,000 | 20,000 |
| Judges of the district courts of the Virgin Islands, Alaska, and the Canal Zone | 15,000 | 20,000 |
| Judges of the Tax Court of the United States | 15,000 | 20,000 |

HISTORY OF FEDERAL JUDICIAL SALARIES

The history of Federal judicial salaries has been as follows: Prior to 1911 the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States was $13,000;[2] in that year it was raised to $15,000; in the same year the salaries of the Associate Justices were raised from $12,500 to $14,500.[3] In 1926 the salary of the Chief Justice was raised to $20,500 and the salaries of the Associate Justices to $20,000.[4] Until 1891 the salaries of the District judges varied in the several districts.[5] In that year a uniform salary of $5,000 was fixed.[6] This was increased in 1903 to $6,000[7] and in 1919 to $7,500.[8] In 1891 the salary of the judges of the circuit courts of appeals was fixed at $6,000.[9] This was increased in 1903 to $7,000[10] and in 1919 to $8,500.[11] In 1926 the salaries of the judges of the United States circuit courts of appeals, including the justices of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of

Since the establishment in 1891 of uniform salaries for district judges, it has been recognized "that it is impossible to make and pass a bill fixing graduated salaries and paying different compensations to judges of the same class because of geographical or other reasons.

"The mind of the bar association and that of all persons interested in the present bill recognizes the fact that a flat advance is all that can be accomplished. This is justified because today, under the law governing the appointment and assignment of judges to different localities and districts, judges of our Federal courts are like a mobile army that can be moved here and there and assigned to work distances probably [far] from their home district. All this favors the creation of a flat increase that shall be the same in every district throughout the United States." The quotation is from page 3 of H. Rept. No. 232, 69th Cong., 1st sess. Columbia, were fixed at $12,500; [12] those of the judges of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals and of the Court of Claims, at $12,500; [13] those of the judges of the United States district courts, including the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia, at $10,000, except that of the chief justice of the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia which was fixed at $10,500; [14] the salaries of the judges of the United States Customs Court were fixed at $10,000.[15] The salaries of the judges of the district courts of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Alaska were fixed by amendments to the respective organic acts at $10,000 in 1926, [16] and in 1946 at $15,000.[17] The salary of the judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands was fixed in 1928 at $7,500; [18] in 1940 at $10,000; [19] and in 1946 at $15,000.[20] In 1946 the salaries of the judges of all the other lower Federal courts as well as the salaries of the Chief Justice and of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court were fixed as set forth in the compilation printed at the beginning of this memorandum.[21] As stated the salary of the judge of the District Court of the Canal Zone is fixed by the statutes referred to in note 1, supra, which are still in effect, at the same rate as that paid to judges of the United States district courts generally. The salaries of the judges of the Tax Court of the United States were fixed in 1924 at $7,500.[19] This was increased in 1939 to $10,000 [20] and in 1946 to $15,000.[21]

PRESENT FEDERAL JUDICIAL SALARIES COMPARED WITH THOSE IN OTHER COURT SYSTEMS

In England, the Lord Chancelor, who is the highest judicial officer, receives an annual salary of £10,000 (approximately $40,000 at the present depreciated rate of exchange). The presiding judge of the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, first and second departments, receives an annual salary of $31,500; the associate judges receive salaries of $30,000. The chief judge of the Court of Appeals of New York receives $25,500 plus $3,000 expenses, and the associate judges receive $25,000 plus $3,000 expenses. The justices of the Supreme Court of New York, the trial court of general civil judisdiction, in the large metropolitan areas, including New York County, receive salaries of $28,000 a year. The judges of the court of general sessions of New York, the trial court of general criminal jurisdiction, receive $28,000 a year in the large metropolitan areas, including New York County. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey receives $25,000 a year and the associate justices of that court receive $24,000 a year. The judges of the superior court, the trial court of general jurisdiction, receive $20,000 a year. The chief justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania receives $23,500 a year, while the associate justices receive $23,000. The judges of the court of common pleas of the State of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties, a trial court of general civil jurisdiction, receive salaries of $16,500 a year.

ECONOMIC CHANGE SINCE ESTABLISHMENT IN 1946 OF THE PRESENT SALARY SCALE

An important factor in favor of an increase in judicial salaries is that fixed salaries have over a long period of years been diminishing salaries so far as purchasing power is concerned. According to figures made available by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Consumers' Price Index for moderate income families in large cities as of December 15, 1937, stood at 103; as of December 15, 1946 (the year in which the latest legislation for increase of judicial salaries was passed), the index stood at 153.3; as of November 15, 1948, the index stood at 172.2.

THE EFFECT OF TAXES UPON JUDICIAL SALARIES

Judicial salaries have declined in adequacy in part because of taxes. The figures set out below, which are computed under the Revenue Act of 1948 and on the assumptions set out in footnote 22, show the amount of taxes to be paid by the judges at present salaries and at the salaries proposed:

| | Present salary | Tax | Proposed salary | Tax |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Chief Justice of the United States | $25,500 | $5,709.92 | $35,000 | $9,464.00 |
| Associate Justices of the Supreme Court | 25,000 | 5,542.72 | 30,000 | 7,381.92 |
| Circuit judges | 17,500 | 3,224.80 | 22,500 | 4,706.72 |
| District judges and judges of the Tax Court | 15,000 | 2,564.80 | 20,000 | 3,948.16 |

Using a circuit judge's salary as an example, on January 1, 1937, the salary was not taxable by either the Federal Government or a State government. The salary was $12,500 net to the judge. While the 1946 act increased the salary to $17,500, this salary was subject to a Federal income tax of $3,224 in 1948, leaving $14,276. The net gain to the judge over his 1937 salary was only $1,776. The cost of living, according to the figures given under the previous heading, increased from 103 in 1937 to 172.2 in 1948. If the proposed increase be granted by Congress the net to the judge, deducting a tax of $4,706 from $22,500, the amount of the proposed salary, will be $17,794—a gain of $5,294 over his 1937 salary. This will be of aid in overcoming the increased cost of living.

RELATION BETWEEN JUDICIAL SALARIES AND SALARIES OF OFFICERS OF THE EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT

There has been a definite relation between the salaries of the United States judges and those of officers of the executive department of the Government. Since 1925, except for dislocation arising from recent legislation, the salaries of Cabinet officers have been maintained at a level of $2,500 above that of circuit judges. For example, in 1926 the compensation of Cabinet officers was $15,000 while that of circuit judges was $12,500. The salaries of the Chief Justice of the United States and of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court were fixed in amounts of $5,000 in excess of those of Cabinet officers. The salaries of the judges of the United States district courts were fixed in an amount of $5,000 less than those of Cabinet officers and $2,500 less than those of circuit judges. The proposed legislation will reestablish and maintain the historic relationship between the salaries of the judiciary and the Cabinet officers.

The salaries of the Vice President, of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and of the Chief Justice of the United States have been on a substantial parity except for the increase effected in the latter's salary in 1946. Legislation enacted by the Eighty-first Congress, first session (S. 103, Public Law No. 2, 81st Cong.), provides that the Vice President and the Speaker shall receive salaries of $30,000 each, plus $10,000 each as an expense allowance. The salary of the Chief Justice should be increased to $35,000 because of this as well as on account of his numerous onerous administrative duties.[23]

COST OF THE PROPOSED INCREASE OF JUDICIAL SALARIES

The proposed salary increases involve 337 judgeships. The additional annual gross expenditure would amount to $1,689,500. But as noted above a substantial portion of this will go back to the Treasury in the form of taxes.

GENERAL COST OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIAL SYSTEM

It is appropriate to point out that the appropriation for the Federal judiciary is less than one-nineteenth of 1 percent of the total appropriation for the Government.[24]

AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES CODE RELATING TO COURT OF CLAIMS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I by request introduce for appropriate reference a bill having to do with proposed changes respecting the United States Court of Claims.

This proposed legislation was submitted to me by the Honorable Marvin Jones, chief justice of the Court of Claims; and I introduce it by request, and so that it may have proper study and consideration in the Committee on the Judiciary, where it will be referred to the standing Subcommittee on Improvements in Judiciary Machinery.

So that my own position with regard to this matter may be clear, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a copy of a letter which I addressed to Judge Jones, under date of January 13, having to do with the legislative proposals embodied in the bill which I have just introduced, together with the text of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the letter presented by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 638) to amend title 28, United States Code, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN (by request), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The letter presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 13, 1949.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
United States Court of Claims,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE: In answering your letter of December 7, I promised to write to you again after the new Congress got under way.

As you know, Public Law 773 of the Eightieth Congress was a comprehensive act codifying the entire title 28 of the United States Code. Even though great care had been taken in the preparation of the bill, by reason of its size and complexity, it was anticipated that there would probably be numerous typographical errors and matters of a similar nature that would need to be corrected by a subsequent bill. As fast as these errors or other defects appear, or are brought to light, they are being assembled, all to be included in a single corrective bill.

However, it is planned that this bill will include no substantive changes in the law as it was prior to June 1948, and as it was

[13] 44 Stat. 919 (1926).
[14] 60 Stat. 716 (1946).
[15] 45 Stat. 997 (1928).
[16] 54 Stat. 220 (1940).
[17] 60 Stat. 716 (1946).
[18] 60 Stat. 716 (1946).
[19] 43 Stat. 337 (1924).
[21] 60 Stat. 716 (1946).

[22] The computation is based upon the assumptions that: (1) the judicial salary is the only income of the judge; (2) the judge is married; (3) his wife has no income; (4) standard deduction is taken; and (5) the tax is computed by the use of the split-income method.

[23] For example, the Chief Justice is chairman of the Judicial Conference of the United States.

[24] The appropriation for the Federal judiciary for the present fiscal year (1949) is $21,021,611; the total appropriation for the Government is $40,180,017,813.

intended to be enacted, but only such changes as are necessary to make it typographically or grammatically correct.

Numerous substantive changes have been proposed from time to time, some of which were included in Public Law 773, and others of which were included in the original bill (H. R. 3214, 80th Cong.) as introduced, but which were dropped out before final passage and approval.

The changes proposed in your letter of December 7 are substantive in nature and therefore, in my opinion, should not be included in the corrective bill; but, rather, should be considered on their individual merits, there being sound arguments, both pro and con, on these proposals.

Your first proposal is controversial in that it provides for interchange of judges between the Court of Claims (and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals) and the regular United States district courts. The immediate question is raised as to the constitutionality of this proposal, since it provides for the judge of a legislative court to exercise the functions of a judge of a constitutional court. In my opinion, this proposal merits thorough and careful study from this angle, as well as from the angle of necessity.

Your second proposal would enlarge the judicial conference by the inclusion of the chief judge of the Court of Claims (and of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals) as members. At present the United States district judges are not represented (except by their senior circuit judge) and many of them now feel they should be represented on said conference. Should an individual legislative court be so represented, much argument would be presented for its further enlargement to include a direct representative of the district judges. While this proposal appears to have some merit, I believe it should be carefully studied for its possible implications.

Your third proposal, to grant Court of Claims commissioners a travel allowance of $10 per day (in lieu of the present maximum of $7) unquestionably is sound and should be enacted.

In this connection, I call your attention to my bill, S. 48, a copy of which is enclosed.

Your fourth and fifth proposals, respectively, to grant additional powers to the court to issue mandamus and similar writs, and to repeal existing provisions of law authorizing the court to receive cases from Government departments for a report on the facts and law, under its rules, both appear to have merit, but neither should be enacted hastily, as part of an omnibus bill, and without considering the arguments both for and against.

Your sixth proposal, to permit appeals under the Tort Claims Act from district courts to the Court of Claims, without agreement of both parties (as now required by law), also is a substantive change, obviously having much merit; but, also, too important, in my opinion, to be rammed through in an omnibus bill.

These are preliminary thoughts only, and not final conclusions; but I wonder if you may not feel, upon reflection, it would be better to include your proposals in a separate bill (or perhaps two or more separate bills) rather than trying to tack them onto the proposed corrective measure for title 28.

I shall be happy to have your further views in this matter.

Kindest regards and all good wishes.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN.

PROTECTION OF BADGES, ETC., OF AUXILIARIES OF VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce four bills which I feel are vitally necessary in order to protect the badges, medals, emblems, and other insignia of auxiliaries of veterans' organizations and in addition, to renew certain patents on the badges of the American Legion and its auxiliaries. These bills have been kindly suggested by the able director of the national legislative commission of the American Legion, Gen. John Thomas Taylor.

The first of the bills is identical to a bill which I introduced in the Eightieth Congress, S. 2239, in order to protect the badges, medals, emblems, and other insignia of auxiliaries of the veterans' organizations. The American Legion has furnished me with a list indicating unmistakably that these veterans' emblems have been infringed upon in several cases filed with the FBI by various commercial organizations. Such commercial infringement for private purposes should, of course, be stopped. Obviously, we owe it to our ex-service men and women, to their widows and sons, to make sure that their official badges and medals are used only for the public-spirited purposes of these fine veterans' organizations.

The other three bills are designed to extend the patents on the badges of the Legion, the Legion auxiliaries, and the badge of the Sons of the American Legion. During the Seventy-fourth Congress, we enacted Public Laws 230 and 231, extending the 14-year patent period of the Legion badge and the Auxiliary badge. Such patent extension is called for in the public interest and I feel that it should be promptly approved by the Congress.

In addition, I should like to point out with relation to bill No. 4 that the patent on the badge of the Sons of the American Legion expires on May 8, 1949, and, therefore, it is essential that this patent be extended, too.

I am hoping that the Senate Judiciary Committee will be able to take prompt action on all of the four measures. In so doing, it will prove (just as I am sure the Congress will prove) its deep interest in the magnificent work done by these organizations which is entitled to appropriate recognition.

The bills introduced by Mr. WILEY, were received, read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

S. 645. A bill to amend Public Law 663, Seventy-sixth Congress, so as to protect the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of auxiliaries to veterans' organizations;

S. 646. A bill granting a renewal of patent No. 54,296 relating to the badge of the American Legion;

S. 647. A bill granting a renewal of patent No. 55,398 relating to the badge of the American Legion Auxiliary; and

S. 648. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, section 705, to protect the badge, medal, emblem, and other insignia of auxiliaries to veterans' organizations; and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF ACT CREATING INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 211) to amend the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the Transportation Act, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1924, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

STUDY OF FOREIGN LANGUAGES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in connection with an article entitled "Language Is Ordnance" by Max Sherover, from the magazine Armed Force, which I have presented for printing in the Appendix, I submit a concurrent resolution for appropriate reference.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8) was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, as follows:

Whereas the present position of the United States of America in world affairs necessitates greater contact between citizens of the United States of America and other nationals; and

Whereas a knowledge of foreign languages by American citizens is deemed by this Congress to facilitate the success of American peacetime policy; and

Whereas, in the event of hostilities, mastery of foreign languages on the part of military personnel is deemed of great value to the United States of America; and

Whereas the ability of Americans to communicate in foreign languages will contribute to greater cooperation with the United Nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That it shall be the policy of the Government of the United States and its official agencies to encourage the study of foreign languages by American citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That no Government agency shall in any way discourage the study of foreign languages on the part of any citizen eligible for schooling or training under its facilities or sponsorship; and be it yet further

Resolved, That members of the armed forces of the United States and veterans of the armed forces shall be given every opportunity and encouragement to take advantage of training facilities in foreign languages which are availale to them, and that the specific agencies of the United States Government shall be responsible for encouraging the study of foreign languages among those falling under their jurisdiction and are specifically instructed to place no hindrance to, nor in any way inhibit, such study; and be it still further

Resolved, That the Veterans' Administration of the United States Government shall not refuse to authorize enrollment in language courses under its sponsorship to any veteran who has educational entitlement under Public Law 346 or Public Law 16 provided only that he has the educational qualifications to pursue such course and regardless of his present or contemplated vocation.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S INAUGURATION ADDRESS (S. DOC. NO. 5)

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, and by unanimous consent, it was—

Ordered, That the inauguration address of the President on January 20, 1949, be printed as a Senate document.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] be assigned to service on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MYERS

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address regarding business conditions, delivered by him in Philadelphia, January 11, 1949, at the annual dinner meeting of the Tacony Manufacturers' Association, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTRAVAGANCE IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING—ARTICLE BY SENATOR BRIDGES

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article relating to extravagance in Government spending, entitled "Where To Swing the Ax," written by him and published in the December issue of the American magazine, which appears in the Appendix.]

SENATOR HILL—MAN OF THE YEAR IN SERVICE TO SOUTHERN AGRICULTURE

[Mr. SPARKMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the announcement in the Progressive Farmer magazine of January 1949, of its selection of Senator HILL as "Man of the year in service to southern agriculture," together with press comment, which appear in the Appendix.]

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES

[Mr. LODGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the text of Senate Joint Resolution 2, together with a letter from the Brookings Institution, and newspaper comment, which appear in the Appendix.]

A BLUEPRINT FOR 1949–52—ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "A Blueprint for 1949–52," from the Washington Post, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SITUATION IN CHINA—RETIREMENT OF CHIANG KAI-SHEK

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial relating to conditions in China, entitled "We Let Down a Friend," published in the Washington News of January 22, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

LANGUAGE IS ORDNANCE—ARTICLE BY MAX SHEROVER

[Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Language Is Ordnance," by Max Sherover, from the magazine Armed Force for December 25, 1948, which appears in the Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, or other routine matters, morning business is closed.

CONSIDERATION OF LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief announcement. I have noticed that over the week end there has been some newspaper discussion in regard to the position taken by the junior Senator from Oregon as to the time table for the consideration of labor legislation. Apparently there has been something more than newspaper discussion over the week end, because someone apparently has been at work, judging by communications I am receiving from various labor groups, seeking to give the impression that the junior Senator from Oregon is attempting to stall action on labor legislation.

Mr. President, I am very glad to reply to labor from my seat here today, because I think it is time for American labor to face some legislative realities and to recognize, before it is too late, the difference between political gestures and a sincere attempt on the part of some of us to work for a revision of labor legislation which will protect the legitimate rights of labor, as well as of employers.

Certainly, Mr. President, if I wished to make political capital out of the labor legislation problem which confronts us I could say to American labor, "I shall support an immediate repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and immediate repassage of the Wagner Act." But I am not going to mislead American labor; so I am asking, in reply to the communications I have received from American labor, "What do you want? Do you want careful, thorough consideration of labor legislation by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or do you want a labor bill written on the floor of the United States Senate?"

Mr. President, I wish to say that any attempt to immediately repeal the Taft-Hartley law and repass the Wagner Act without change will only result in a host of amendments to any such proposal on the floor of the United States Senate. I do not intend, as one who can really stand on his record for protecting the legitimate rights of labor, to be a party to any such political gesture or strategy.

I want fair legislation, and I am going to fight in the Labor Committee for fair legislation; but the enactment of fair legislation calls for considered judgment. It calls for hearings—open hearings, fair hearings, hearings in which all points of view will have an opportunity to present their case in support of their contentions.

Mr. President, it is true that at the last meeting of the Committee on Labor, I offered a motion. In effect, the motion was that the committee should seek to attempt to convene hearings on labor legislation this week. In fact, I think I said in committee that I hoped our first hearing could be not later than Thursday of this week. I urged further that we should seek to make our goal the ending of the hearings by March 1, and that we should seek then, on the basis of the record made at the hearings and the records already on file with the committee, complete drafting of the bill by the first part of April. I urged that at least sometime during the first 2 weeks of April we should bring to the floor of the Senate the best piece of legislation which the composite viewpoints of the committee can present.

Mr. President, I see no chance, I do not see it as being within the realm of possibility, to complete the hearings on labor legislation within less than a month. So I am not going to say to American labor that I think we can rush through hearings within less than a month. If future events show, as the committee goes to work, that we can finish the hearings before March 1, the junior Senator from Oregon will not be a party to forcing the hearings to be continued to March 1 because of any particular date which may have been set. If, on the other hand, let me say to labor here and now, future events show that we cannot complete the hearings by March 1, and that a few days thereafter may be needed, the junior Senator from Oregon will vote for an extension of the hearings.

As for the rest of the timetable, Mr. President, if during the month of April we in the committee can complete committee action in less than a month, certainly the junior Senator from Oregon will do everything within his power to speed up the consideration in the executive sessions of the committee—but only insofar as such a course is consonant with due deliberation on the evidence before us.

It is not in the interests of American labor, Mr. President—and I want American labor to take it from me now—for them to attempt to push through the Senate of the United States within a few short days or two or three short weeks labor legislation which is to their liking and which they think must be passed. I am satisfied that the rank and file of American workers want fair legislation, and nothing more. I am satisfied that, upon reflection, all labor leaders in America will recognize that their best interests will be served only by the passage of fair labor legislation.

It happens to be the judgment of the junior Senator from Oregon that in the Taft-Hartley bill, against which I voted, the Congress went to an extreme position in passing legislation which transgressed upon the fair, legitimate rights of labor. Therefore I have said all over the country that I think the Taft-Hartley law should be repealed. I also think it should be repealed—speaking partisanly for a moment, Mr. President—so as to get a Republican label off of it. But I think it should be repealed on its demerits, and that we should pass legislation which is fair to all parties concerned, including the American public. But I also say to American labor today, from this desk, that the repassage of the Wagner Act without change would not be fair to the legitimate rights of American employers, for reasons which I have expressed at length, both in committee and on this floor, time and time again.

Thus, I hope that it will be clear to American labor that the junior Senator from Oregon is going to oppose any steam-roller tactics on the part of American labor. I shall always stand up to be counted against the steam-roller tactics of any other group in this country.

When the debate on this subject is over, Mr. President, it will be found that I shall have made a record on it, and it will be a record for fair legislation—fair to employers, fair to labor, and fair to the American public. Therefore I serve notice that I am not going to be rushed into any quick action on labor legislation.

I think a timetable which seeks to have labor legislation brought on the floor of the Senate not later than the first 10 days of April is a perfectly fair timetable. I say now to labor—because I want labor to know now what I shall do in executive session of the committee—it is a timetable for which I shall vote this afternoon when the Labor Committee reconvenes.

AUTHORIZATION TO REPORT SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 31

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have been informed that it is anticipated that after the Senate adjourns today, it probably will reconvene on Thursday.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If that be so, I should like to obtain consent to report Senate Joint Resolution 31, relating to the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train during the adjournment, provided my committee finishes with it in the meantime, as if the Senate were in session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, tomorrow the free people of Israel are to conduct elections, thus giving evidence of their readiness and eagerness to adopt the practices of democratic and freedom-loving people. This is the first time in recorded history that such elections have been held in that part of the world, proving conclusively Israel's good faith in upholding the ideals of democracy.

It seems timely, therefore, for us, who have been sympathetic with the efforts of the Jewish people to establish a homeland in Israel, to bespeak the utmost cooperation of our State Department and our Government in furtherance of the effort to attain a peaceful settlement of the issues in that troubled area.

It seems obvious that, since the establishment of the independent State of Israel, its leaders and its people have given to the world the most convincing evidence, first, of their unshakable devotion to the idea of a homeland that would provide a refuge to members of their race throughout the world, and, secondly, of their ability to govern themselves successfully and defend themselves against attacks from without or within.

Israel has amazed the world not only by its military successes but by its ability to cope with any of the emergencies that have developed. By their own indomitable courage and tenacity its people have brought stability to their national economy. Most important of all, they have won the respect of the neighboring Arab states to such an extent that negotiations looking to a peaceful settlement of the controversial issues are now under way or pending with three of their erstwhile opponents.

In the unsettled state of the world today, and with the Middle East a potential source of world conflagration, there is cause for satisfaction in the direct negotiations now being conducted on the island of Rhodes between representatives of Israel and Egypt.

Reports of preliminary discussions between representatives of Israel and of both Lebanon and Transjordan give increased significance to the advance that has been made by the Israel Government in its efforts to reach peaceful settlement of the boundary question and other issues.

With such indications of coming peaceful arrangement of the affairs of Israel it would be most fruitful of good if our State Department would lend the good offices of this country toward the avoidance of any possible unfortunate intervention by any country at this time.

In view of the truce achieved between Arab powers, represented by King Abdullah of Transjordan, and Israel, it would seem a most unfortunate moment for any action which would tend to disrupt the current conference.

Israel has placed itself in the hands of the United Nations. The United States, as has been indicated in the commendable utterances of President Truman, has given recognition to the new government. But it is to be hoped that the United States will recognize Israel de jure as well as de facto.

Our country should, at this moment, use every means at its command to convince the world that amicable adjustment of difficulties should be encouraged and not thwarted. Let us hasten the day when the people of Israel, with their background of culture and rich tradition, shall have their place in the sun.

HAND-PICKING JURORS IN FEDERAL COURTS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, with the confident expectation that I shall have practically the unanimous support of the Members of this body, I bring to the attention of the Senate once more the flagrant, un-American, and totally inexcusable situation that exists in some of our Federal courts today, namely, the power that some Federal judges have seized, to hand-pick juries.

On Saturday last, according to the Associated Press, Federal Judge John C. Knox, of New York, appeared before the Fayette County Bar Association at Uniontown, Pa., and reiterated what he had previously stated in executive session before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which subcommittee I was chairman, when we were considering Senate bills 17 and 18, dealing with uniform qualifications of jurors in Federal courts, and for other purposes.

Judge Knox, according to the Associated Press, said:

> That he had been told repeatedly that selection of jurors in his district was a hand-picked process. "If this be a valid indictment of my conduct, I cannot do otherwise than admit my guilt," the jurist said. "Nevertheless, unless restrained by an authority that I cannot resist, jurors in my district will continue to be hand-picked."

Here, Mr. President, we find a Federal judge boasting that he has already hand-picked jurors in his court, and saying that he is going to continue to hand-pick them.

What does the Constitution of our country say about trial by jury? Article III, section 2, provides:

> The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

Not by a judge who hand-picks them, but by a jury.

Later, by section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, it is provided:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Judge Knox, of course, in mitigation, in what I cannot help but characterize as an outrageous, reprehensible action by a Federal judge, says that—> those (jurors) chosen should possess as high a degree of intelligence, morality, integrity, and common sense as can be found by those who make the selection.

Mr. President, I wish to make it emphatically, unequivocally, and straightforwardly clear that I am first, last, and all the time opposed to any Federal judge hand-picking any jurors in any case whatever, civil or criminal. I care not whether the men to be tried are murderers, bank robbers, or smugglers, or whether they are Democrats, Republicans, or Communists. Under the Constitution, a defendant in any criminal case is entitled to a fair trial by his peers; and that, in my judgment, does not mean that a Federal judge, who beforehand has made up his mind that someone is guilty of a crime, should be allowed, either directly or indirectly, either through the clerk of court, or court commissioner, or otherwise, to select the 12 men who are going to try that defendant.

Judge Knox's position is not new. On the contrary, it is as old as the hills. There is not an informed lawyer in this body who does not know that approximately 100 years ago, namely, in March 1851, a Member of Congress described the wild country then known as Indian Territory, and the territory west of the Arkansas border, by declaring there was "no God west of Fort Smith."

Thus, in March, 1851, Congress cut the judicial district in two, the eastern section taking in all of Arkansas with the exception of nine counties in the northern part of the State, the western section embracing those nine counties and all the vast area east of Texas and Colorado and what was then called "No Man's Land," the unexplored country beyond the Indian territory.

The site of the first court seat was Van Buren, Ark. Its first presiding judge was Daniel Ringo. However, in 1865, 14 years later, by congressional act, the court's location was moved 5 miles down the Arkansas River to Fort Smith. In that same year, Henry Caldwell was appointed as the first judge to govern exclusively the western jurisdiction, which at that time covered the largest judicial district in the world. His authority was absolute and final. It represented the only legal authority west of Fort Smith, where a Member of Congress had declared there was no God.

In 1872, Judge Caldwell was replaced on the bench by a young lawyer named William Story. I particularly call attention to this Judge Story because it was alleged that he was able to smell money farther than any other judge of his time. Court costs during his 14 months' tenure as judge ran into the fabulous sum of $400,000. He was charged with corruption, incompetency, and bribery. In July 1874, in order to avoid impeachment proceedings in Congress, he resigned.

President Grant immediately thereafter appointed Isaac Charles Parker as judge. To give some idea as to what this judge was like, it will suffice to say that the judge scorned having but one rope, demanding 12, in order that 12 men might be suspended from a single ridge pole. Twelve trap doors were so set that they could be dropped separately or simultaneously.

For 14 years, from the day he stepped on the bench, no appeal could be taken from his decisions. Here in America, a judge's decision was final. No appeal could be taken from his pronouncements of death. He could sentence a man to death, without the possibility of an appeal—a power with which no other judge in America has ever been invested since his day. So what Judge Knox is talking about is not new. The decisions of the judge to whom I referred were absolute and final. He sentenced 168 men to die on the scaffold, of whom 88 were actually hanged. He thus earned for himself the title of "the judge who hanged 88 men." What happened to the rest of the men whom the judge sentenced to death?

I listened to the testimony given by Judge Knox. I heard him tell about the fine character possessed by Federal judges in the United States. I agree that the overwhelming number of them are fine, honest, straightforward men, and that they are good judges.

Every Member of this body has knowledge of several corrupt judges in England, whose records are still a blot on Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence. In this country we have also had some Federal judges whose records have been bad, or else they would not have been tried through impeachment proceedings by this very body.

What happened to the 80 remaining convicted men who were sentenced to death by this judge, with all his power? Of the 80 remaining convicted men, 43 had their sentences commuted by the President. Then suddenly Congress provided that after May 1, 1889, the right to appeal to the United States Supreme Court would lie in all cases where the punishment was death. Twenty-three of the 80 appealed and were convicted of lesser crimes, five died in prison, four were granted new trials, one was killed while attempting to escape, two were pardoned, one was declared insane, and another was bonded and never recaptured.

I want the Members of the Senate to pay particular attention to this statement:

While Judge Parker had this enormous responsibility, so fearful were the defense attorneys of incurring Judge Parker's wrath that it was not until 10 men had been sentenced to hang that a defense attorney dared exercise his right in behalf of his client, though the law had been established on May 1, 1889. The attorney who dared appeal the case was Attorney J. Warren Reed, a newcomer to the Fort Smith bar.

What was the record when this first appeal was taken? The appellant was Henry Starr, a professional bank robber whom Judge Parker had sentenced to the scaffold for the slaying of Deputy Floyd Wilson. The Supreme Court reversed his decision and remanded the case under the mitigating circumstance that Starr killed Wilson in an open fight after he had told the deputy to go for his gun. Again Starr went on trial and was sentenced to hang.

Again Reed braved Judge Parker's wrath and appealed. Within 16 months Starr was again granted a new hearing.

Judge Parker could no longer stand the vexation of having his opinions overruled. In his dispute with the United States Supreme Court, he declared that he was more familiar with criminal procedure and criminal law than were the justices of the country's highest Court, whose work was limited almost exclusively to reviewing civil cases.

Newspapers headlined his controversy with Supreme Court Justice Edward D. White, who later became Chief Justice. The Justice accused Parker of being opposed to the right of appeal, and Judge Parker accused the Justice of lack of knowledge of the law.

It was on this score that Judge Parker got into trouble.

Friends of the offended judge of the high court got the ear of Congress. Lawyers who had lost numerous cases before the hanging judge saw a chance to vindicate themselves and damned the court for its cruelties and inhumanity. Considering only the words "he hanged 88 men," others condemned him as being harsh and tyrannical. And in Washington, Senator John Vest, of Missouri, took the floor to declare the Fort Smith hall of justice "a shambles, a butcher's domain, a stench, and a disgrace to civilization."

Almost immediately Congress stripped him of his powers and later abolished his court.

What I wish to call to the attention of the Senate today is that while the Constitution granted the right of trial by jury, the jurors in this court were selected under his personal supervision, with the disastrous result which I have outlined.

What is the present situation in America? Perhaps no one is better qualified to testify as to our jury system than is the Honorable Joseph B. Keenan, practicing attorney in Washington, D. C., and who was head of the Criminal Division and Assistant Attorney General from October 1933 to January 1936, and Assistant to the Attorney General from then until February 1939. For almost 6 years he was the chief prosecutor in this country. He made a record so fine that he was selected by President Truman to take charge of the prosecution of Tojo and other Japanese criminals.

What did Mr. Keenan say when he testified in April 1947, on Senate bills 17 and 18, dealing chiefly with the intention to establish uniform qualifications of jurors in Federal courts?

What he said, Mr. President, is worth reading by every Senator; and I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks the testimony of Joseph B. Keenan, the prosecutor of Tojo and his associates in Japan.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF JOSEPH B. KEENAN, ATTORNEY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. KEENAN. I am Joseph B. Keenan. I have been head of the Criminal Division and Assistant Attorney General from October 1933 to January 1936 and assistant to the Attorney General from then until February 1939.

I would like to present a brief general statement, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to give my notions as a result of my experience with reference generally to the Federal judiciary.

I think that when you take the statistics as to the number of Federal judges and the instances where there have been difficulties with their character, the percentage of high-caliber and satisfactory judges is very remarkable and has been for a long period of time.

I do feel this way, however: That in the administration of justice in Federal courts there is a tendency to bring about what I can no better describe than "blue-ribbon juries."

I think that in turn leads to the jury as a group, perhaps involuntarily, surrendering some of its duties—I won't say privileges alone—to conform to what they may feel the Federal judiciary believes to be the truth, particularly in criminal cases.

Naturally, any such tendency cannot be corrected by any single act or piece of legislation, in my humble opinion. And I do not believe that, except in very rare instances, Federal court judges have any desire to exercise improperly their prerogatives of the bench. Yet I have known of many instances, where it has seemed that the Federal judge might himself undertake the job of making a determination of cases that do not belong to a jury, but that is a different subject matter.

But I feel from experience which is entirely impersonal that if there could be a measure devised for selection of the judiciary that would be practical, which measure would give the jury a feeling of independence, a feeling of being free from any obligation or influence in their method of selection, it would be a decided improvement in the administration of justice universally.

Now, I have heard the discussion this morning about too many farmers being excluded from the judiciary.

In Cleveland, where I practiced law, we noticed that almost all of the jurors came from outside the city of Cleveland. The city at that time was approximately 800,000.

But in the county, which had a population of about 1,200,000, we found that almost all of the jurors came from the outlying districts.

And while at that time I had no criminal practice in Cleveland, it was notable to the lawyers that we never found any municipal or city representatives on the jury.

I ascribed that, as did other lawyers in the time that I was there, to the fact that the system of selecting jurors was to blame; that if there had been some method by which jurors could have been selected by lots, you would have had less of the rural percentage and more of the urban, which would have been, in the opinion of most lawyers that I talked to, or knew of, a decided improvement in the administration of justice in criminal cases.

From the standpoint of the fairness of judges, I think that always the character of the men that are on the bench will determine that. And whether or not our system, which follows the British system, which gives the Federal judges the right to comment to a limited extent upon the evidence, is a wiser system than that prevailing in many State jurisdictions, where those rights are sharply curtailed, and even forbidden, is another subject matter which has caused, I suppose, a great deal of controversy in years back.

I have read this bill that is submitted here, and I see no particular improvement from the standpoint that I am talking of, in taking 150 or 300 names and putting them in a wheel and then drawing those out by lots.

There is some improvement in it, but it does seem to me that a system of justice where the jury is selected by lot brings a different cross section.

I do not mean from the standpoint of politics at all; it is not that. I would prefer to see every criminal case in the land decided by jurors of the average intellect.

I might recall one instance that is illustrative of that. It was a rather well-known case, tried in the Northwest, involving very serious crime.

There were, I think, four defendants. The Federal court judge was both learned and extremely conscientious, and he discussed the matter of whether or not he would use his prerogative of summing up the evidence, or in any manner tending to any extent to give his views as to the truthfulness of one witness or another.

He said that he had felt when he accepted his position on the bench that he never wanted to do that. But he was positive that these four accused were guilty.

We, who were representing the prosecution, had some doubt, but it was quite a confusing case. There was much evidence pointing to guilt. It had to do mostly with identification.

The court, however, refrained from making any comment, and it left the matter to the jury, which was a jury picked from the rural and the urban populace, about evenly divided.

The jury was out 7 or 8 hours and came back with a verdict of not guilty.

One year later, we brought in four other men, one of whom pleaded guilty to the offense. In other words, we had the wrong men. And with all due respect to the utmost sincerity of this judge and the care with which he followed the case and every detail of it, it confirmed the view that I had.

It is only one instance, it is true, but that confirmed the view that I had, that a jury of men and women distributed from different groups in life, from the rural and urban population, ordinary artisans, are the people that I am convinced, from my experience, I would like to have the matter left to, both from the standpoint of the Government and from the standpoint of the rights of the individual, where they clash with the Government.

So I am here, Mr. Chairman, naturally with no other motive in mind than to give my humble expression, from very limited experience, that any change that could be made in the selection of the Federal jurors that would bring about the conclusion in their mind, "Well, we are here because we have a right to be here. We are performing our functions as citizens of the United States. We are not beholden to any Federal judge or any Federal clerk or any Federal jury commissioner that is appointed by any Federal judge. Our function is just as separate as though we were one of the other three branches of Government, Members of Congress, or members of the legislative branch," would be a decided advance.

There might be considerable difficulty in working it out practically, but I am sure I have never met a Federal judge who had anything else but a desire to get the very best jury that he could get.

I do think, though, that though it is not anything personal as to any particular judge or any jury at any time, it is one of the weak spots in the administration of justice in which improvement could be made, if it were practical—I am sure it could be done—to have the law changed in such a fashion as to permit a wider variance of the type of people involved.

I think there is too strong a conviction that if you get professional men or bank clerks, or men of high education, they are going to be able to determine the facts of a case better than the man who works in the machine shop, or on the farm, or in the corner grocery store—if there are any left. That type of composite jury of 12 people, I think, goes further toward insuring the intelligent and faithful administration of justice than the present system which we have.

The nearer we could go toward that, the greater the improvement which could be achieved.

* * * * *

Senator LANGER. I would like to have your comment on what Mr. Keenan said about getting these jurors by lot in some manner.

Judge KNOX. We have had this selection of jurors under the present system since the Judiciary Act of 1789; being bound, as I have already said, by the State statutes. And I do not know how, outside of what is proposed in this bill, you are going to improve the method.

Now, you get into a political situation all over the country, where people have been asked to select names, county chairmen, for example, and they send in the names of persons who are on their voting lists, or something of that kind. That is the easiest way in the world to pack a jury, if one wants it to be packed.

What I am trying to do there is to broaden the scope of the jury commission, so that it may, under the direction of the judge, get a cross section of the entire community, and have them serve as jurors.

You had a selective draft during the war. You got the men who were capable of entering into the armed services. All we are asking here is to have a jury selection, and to get good people, people with brains, people with experience, people who have a stake in the country, onto our juries.

Senator LANGER. I cannot see—can you, Mr. Burdick—how you could pack a jury with names chosen a year in advance, chosen by various city councils and county commissioners.

Mr. BURDICK. Absolutely no chance. Because the case would not be in existence at the time they are drawn.

Judge KNOX. A great many are in existence, as a matter of fact, because they went over substantial lengths of time. And you have got to change your jurors' names in the wheel ever so often under the statute.

Anybody can pack a jury—I will grant you that—if you have someone who is dishonest.

Mr. CLARK. Another thing: You would have deaths. People would move away. And there would be exigencies that would destroy your system.

Judge KNOX. There would be a thousand and one things.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to ask Mr. Keenan: Do you think that under this system you would get a higher class of jurymen than you would by just picking them at random? Do you think you would get people who are more highly educated and people who would have a higher sense of values?

Mr. KEENAN. I think you would get better educated people, but, though it may be an idiosyncrasy of mine, I just feel that when you take the common man from the shop and do not lay so much stress on the education, you get a pretty good result from your jury. It may be that they will be fooled a little bit more easily, but I doubt it.

Mr. CLARK. That may be true in many cases, but many cases are very highly complicated. Do you not think, from your experience with the Federal courts, that they get a pretty good jury?

Mr. KEENAN. In Federal courts? Yes; I think you do.

To go back again—and this is surely without any reference to any individuals or any judges—I do think that there is a necessity for having a jury system as independent as it possibly can be. I do not care who the judge is. They look up to him. They look up to a State court judge, but particularly to a Federal court judge, who is appointed for life.

I think the intelligence is there, of course.

Mr. CLARK. You do not mean to say they would be influenced by the time for which they would be selected by a commissioner?

Mr. KEENAN. I remember a case that I can tell you of, out in Cleveland, that did not take more than 2 hours to try. I do not know the name of the man, and never did know what it was, but he was tried in the morning and convicted and sentenced, and I sat there waiting for a motion. I was just curious, because I could not, as a lawyer, find much if any evidence of the man's guilt. I talked to the foreman of the jury after they had voted for the conviction. He was one of the best-known men in Cleveland, the head of a large enterprise that had to do with a publishing company.

He said, "Why, of course there was no evidence in the case; none at all."

"Well," I said, "the judge charged you that unless you found these men to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, they should be acquitted."

"Well," he said, "we just made up our minds that" so and so—naming the assistant district attorney—this was several years ago—"probably brought in the wrong brief case."

"But," he said, "do you mean to say that the judge, whom you know, on that bench, would permit an innocent man to go to the penitentiary? Why, certainly not. The Federal agency that did the investigating knew the man was guilty. This judge, who has practiced law, has a long and honored record in the city of Cleveland, and he would not permit an injustice."

But I am telling you that he was the type of citizen that I am talking about; one whom you would select if you were picking out a "blue ribbon jury." I use that expression without intending offense to anyone. He would be the sort of man you would pick out.

Mr. CLARK. The same thing might occur in the selection of a jury at random.

Mr. KEENAN. It could, but my honest opinion is that the independent juror would be more likely to say, "Well, I do not care who the judge is. I did not try to get this job."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Keenan, do you not think that the average person picked at random would have a much higher respect for and confidence in a judge, and in fact would be afraid not to follow his instructions, to a greater extent than would a person such as you describe?

Mr. KEENAN. It could be, Mr. Attorney General. Nevertheless, when the man comes from the lower strata, the workingman, the farmer, he is more apt, I think, to say, "Well, this is my job," and have a little bit more pride in the job as juror than the well-educated man. But that is just a viewpoint.

Mr. BURDICK. I would like to ask Mr. Keenan a question.

Senator LANGER. Go right ahead.

Mr. BURDICK. Intelligence is not necessarily measured by education, is it?

Mr. KEENAN. I think not.

Mr. BURDICK. Then, even though a man worked on a farm or was a stone mason or a clerk in a store, he might have just as keen intelligence to determine a case as a graduate of Yale or Harvard; is that not true?

Mr. KEENAN. I feel you are undoubtedly correct about that.

Mr. BURDICK. This matter of education does not change anyone's intelligence.

Mr. CLARK. I did not mean we should have only college graduates on a jury. I meant that there are many cases where one who has had some experience in business life would be able to pass on it much better.

Mr. BURDICK. Well, two and two make four, and that is what a common jury looks at. My experience has been exactly as Mr. Keenan's has been with juries. I have had lots of them. I tried more jury cases before I came to Congress than anybody who ever came here. And I find that the cross-section of the people, no matter what they are doing, is the best kind of a jury you can have, men and women both.

Senator MOORE. That does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that under this proposal we are confining the selection of jurors to any particular section of society. It is a cross-section of the country.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, at about the same time there was testimony given by USHER L. BURDICK, who is now a Representative from the State of North Dakota. He was assistant United States attorney in North Dakota. I ask unanimous consent to have certain portions of his testimony printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. USHER L. BURDICK, FORMER REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA, WILLISTON, N. DAK.

Mr. BURDICK. I am USHER L. BURDICK, of Williston, N. Dak.

* * * * *

Well, I have been a member of the legislature, speaker of the house, lieutenant governor, State's attorney, and Member of Congress.

Senator LANGER. You were a Member of Congress for how long?

Mr. BURDICK. Ten years. I also was assistant United States district attorney for North Dakota.

Senator LANGER. How long were you assistant United States district attorney?

Mr. BURDICK. Three and a half years.

Senator LANGER. You are familiar with the jury system in the Federal court, are you not?

Mr. BURDICK. I am.

Senator LANGER. Will you just state your experience, in view of the questions that I have asked the Attorney General, as to what your experience has been in connection with the Federal courts, Mr. BURDICK?

Mr. BURDICK. Well, as I understand the situation here now, you are trying to devise a plan that will produce fair and just juries. That is the aim; is it not?

Senator LANGER. That is right.

Mr. BURDICK. Well, under the present system, as it operates, that may be done; or the converse of that may be done.

Under the present system, if I am a district judge and determined to convict someone, I will guarantee that he will be convicted. And it all arises from the fact that these jury boxes are filled with names that are presented either to the clerk of the district court or the judge or the commissioner by interested parties.

After the box is filled, the drawing is just and legal. But the point is: Whose name gets into that box?

Now, we have had several experiences in that connection in North Dakota. I can put any name in that box that I want to, if I am a United States district attorney. I have been requested time and time again to help fill the box with names.

Mr. CLARK. That would be a violation of the statute. You ought to report it.

Mr. BURDICK. No; that would not mean any violation. If the commissioner says, "Now, Mr. BURDICK, are there some good jurors in your county, good intelligent, well-educated men, or businessmen? If there are, give me their names"—that is not a violation of law.

Mr. CLARK. That is just making a suggestion. That is not putting them in the box.

Mr. BURDICK. Well, I don't think it would be a very difficult legal problem to take all of the various districts in the United States and lay them out on the table and then devise a law that would cover them all at one time. That can be done.

Mr. CLARK. That is what the judges and the various people that have worked on this bill have tried to do.

You see, you must remember that this bill applies to 48 States. There are a lot of differences in the various districts, so you have to get a system that would be workable in each district, regardless of the population, whether it is a thickly populated area or a State where the population is not so thickly distributed.

Mr. BURDICK. Well, No. 4 is that the choice of specified sources from which names of prospective jurors are selected must be entrusted to the good faith of the clerk or the jury commissioner, acting under the direction of the district judge.

Now, then, if you have a district judge who is determined to convict somebody, then your system goes right back to where it was before.

For example, take the case of this particular judge. He is not a judge now; he is retired. Here is the way he would show his leanings in a lawsuit.

I have tried a great many cases before this judge, and those he wanted to convict he embarrassed me by making it too easy, and those he wanted to let loose it was almost impossible to do anything about.

Now, here is the way to do it:

He is instructing the jury:

"Now, gentlemen," he said, "if you find from the evidence submitted in this case that the defendant is not guilty, it is your duty to acquit him. But, on the other hand, if you are convinced from the evidence that he is guilty, it is your duty to convict."

Mr. CLARK. He could say that under your system, could he not, just as easily as under mine?

Mr. BURDICK. No; he would not have the same school to address.

Mr. CLARK. Those are the instructions to the jury.

Mr. BURDICK. He would have a jury right from the grass roots.

Mr. CLARK. He could still address them, though.

Mr. BURDICK. No. But we have a way of paying no attention to some fellows.

Mr. CLARK. If he wanted to be crooked, he could discharge them. We are assuming we are dealing with a crooked judge.

Now, there are many ways in which he could throw a case out rather than try to go to the trouble of selecting a jury and putting them in a box. He could dismiss the jury—dismiss the case. Hold that there was was not enough evidence. There are plenty of ways—if you are assuming that there is a crooked judge. I think that is an improper assumption.

I think we prosecuted one case from Pennsylvania in the last few months, and I think there has only been one other such prosecution in the history of the United States.

Mr. BURDICK. Of what?

Mr. CLARK. Of a district judge, or any judge.

Mr. BURDICK. I was not here very long, but we removed one while I was a Member of Congress.

Mr. CLARK. Several resigned, of course.

Senator LANGER. Of course, it would not do any good to dismiss that case because the next jury would be drawn out of the same box containing the same kind of men. The judge would not gain anything.

Mr. BURDICK. I am not finding fault with the way the names are drawn out of the box, but the way those names get in the box in the first place.

Mr. CLARK. You see, your example breaks down. The judge could say the same thing to those jurors that you picked under your system as to those who were picked under this proposal.

Mr. BURDICK. He could, but he would be saying it to a different crowd of people.

Mr. CLARK. And if he just had this impelling force—this crooked mind that you spoke of—he would not have to do that. He would just say, "Gentlemen of the jury, the evidence is not sufficient. The case is closed. The court is out of session." And he would walk off the bench.

Mr. BURDICK. How would it work the other way? He would not say, "The case is dismissed and we shall go home," if he wanted to convict.

Mr. CLARK. Then he would make them a speech, under the example you give. He would make them a speech about how guilty this person was. Then, if they found him not guilty, of course, he would not be able to control that.

But if the district judge makes his mind up along the lines you have indicated, he could certainly say the same things to a jury picked under your system as he could to a jury picked under this system.

Mr. BURDICK. I am perfectly willing to trust a jury, no matter what the judge says, if a jury comes in just like ordinary juries do.

But when a judge also selects a jury and makes a speech to them, I am saying right now that that is unfair and unjust.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I do not know one of the 11 defendants who are on trial in New York today. I do not know a Communist in New York City. I have not communicated with any of them, directly or indirectly. But I will say that in America a murderer, a Communist, a Democrat or a Republican, a smuggler or a bank robber, under the Constitution of the United States is entitled to a square deal when he goes into court; he is entitled to a fair and impartial jury.

I read in the newspapers of yesterday and several days previously what was transpiring in a so-called court of justice, and I conceived it to be my simple duty as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and as a United States Senator to bring to the attention of this body and to the people of the entire country the fact that, in my judgment, the lawyers who are appearing for the Communists have a right, first of all, to show that the jurors are not impartial, because they are not picked from the community at large, but, on the contrary, are, perhaps, as they are alleged to be, members of a jury composed of persons who will not give the defendants a fair trial because of their previous economic condition or their present economic condition, or because of their views on public matters.

Finally, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the law provides that the jurors shall be selected by the clerk of the court and the jury commissioner. What good does it do if the clerk of the court and the jury commissioner are under the influence of a judge who says, "I am going to continue to hand-pick juries"?

PROBLEMS AND FUNCTIONS OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT—NOTICE OF HEARING

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has announced a public hearing to take place beginning on January 31, at which Secretary J. A. Krug, of the Department of the Interior, his assistant secretaries, and the bureau chiefs, will lay before the committee their point of view with respect to the problems and functions of the Department of the Interior. In announcing this public hearing, the committee did so in the hope that Members of the Senate and of the Congress, generally, particularly members of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, might find it possible to attend.

The development of a sound national policy for the conservation and utilization of the natural resources of the United States will be one of the primary duties of the Eighty-first Congress. The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has jurisdiction over matters dealing with the natural resources of the United States. The Bureau of Mines, for example, which deals with the problems of mining throughout the United States, is under the jurisdiction of this committee. The Geological Survey, the studies of which cover the entire country, is also within the jurisdiction of the committee.

The development of the natural resources of the United States becomes a most important problem at this juncture in the national affairs of the country, because the conservation and the utilization of our natural resources must be the foundation upon which will be built our own contribution to world peace and to economic rehabilitation.

The committee is inviting the attention of the public authorities of the various States and the private organizations which deal with water power, mines, and mining, and various other natural resources of water within its jurisdiction.

This will be only the beginning of the broad study contemplated by the committee. Public and private organizations will be invited to submit their suggestions. State bureaus of conservation and of mineral development will be asked to contribute to the study, as well as other Federal agencies like the National Security Resources Board of which Dr. John Steelman of President Truman's staff is the acting chairman.

Announcement was made this week by Edward V. Hickey, Acting Director of the Office of Production of the National Security Resources Board, that complete mobilization plans for all industries for quick expansion and conversion in the event of war are in the process of preparation. More than this is needed if a firm basis for permanent peace is to be established.

Modern war, as the last conflict proved, is an industrial effort as much as it is a military effort. The best preventive of conflict, therefore, is to mobilize our resources for peace before war comes, and thereby demonstrate to the world that the constructive efforts of a peaceful people can win far more for humanity than when natural resources are diverted to destructive purposes.

If we wait for war to mobilize our resources, it will necessarily be done in a totalitarian manner. If we mobilize them for peace now, it can be done in a democratic manner.

The objective of the study now being launched by the Interior Committee will be to find the ways and means by which private capital can be invested for the most effective utilization of the raw materials and the scientific knowledge now available to mankind.

The people of the United States committed themselves to the economic rehabilitation of Europe as an antidote for war. This policy can be successful only if we maintain a sound economy here. That in turn means that we must have, first, a thorough survey of our resources, and, secondly, a policy for their utilization in a manner which will keep the United States economically strong and keep the door of opportunity open for all people to utilize the resources nature has provided.

The United States gained its industrial leadership and its economic strength by reason of the rich endowment of raw materials with which it was blessed. Science is constantly revealing new uses for old materials, and is providing substitutes for those raw materials which are not in as plentiful supply. The coal and oil-shale beds of the United States, for example, provide sources of liquid fuel greater by far than all that is available from petroleum. It has already been demonstrated by the studies of the Bureau of Mines that the reserves of all the oil shale found in the United States alone exceed the total petroleum reserves of the Middle East.

Light metals and plastics are performing old and new tasks for the people. In our Western States we have vast deposits of alumina clay sufficient to make the United States independent of any foreign supplies.

It is not exactly intelligent to wait for a new war before we undertake the full utilization of these vast possibilities, just as it is not intelligent to await a new depression before we work for economic stabilization. That is the expensive way to do the job. For example, after the surrender of Japan, bringing the fighting to a close in World War II, Congress repealed more than $70,000,000,000 of appropriations. We were ready to spend that money to continue the war. A small fraction of it will prevent another war if expended in searching for the ways and means for the full utilization of our natural and scientific and our human resources in a free social and political structure.

Back in 1941, during the Seventy-seventh Congress, I introduced a Senate resolution for a study of the development of mineral resources on the public lands "with a view toward, first, providing for more effective development and utilization of such resources for the purposes of national defense; second, fostering free competitive enterprise and the investment of private capital in the development of the mining industry and the production of essential and useful minerals; and, third, conserving such mineral resources to the fullest extent which is consistent with their proper development and utilization."

One result of these studies was to reveal new opportunities for mineral production later developed through the RFC during the war.

Later a select committee of the Senate was appointed to investigate petroleum resources and to recommend a national policy. I submitted the report of that committee to the Senate on January 31, 1947. Copies are still available.

During the Eightieth Congress Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, of Nevada, was chairman of a Special National Resources Economic Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. This committee carried on extensive research.

From these beginnings under both Democratic and Republican auspices, it is to be hoped that a national policy may be made effective which will preserve a sound economy in the United States without which peace itself will be impossible.

I make this announcement, Mr. President, in order that the Members of Congress and the public may be aware of the hearing.

I ask unanimous consent that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, as set forth in Public Law 601 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. Public lands generally, including entry, easements, and grazing thereon.
2. Mineral resources of the public lands.
3. Forfeiture of land grants and alien ownership, including alien ownership of mineral lands.
4. Forest reserves and national parks created from the public domain.
5. Military parks and battlefields, and national cemeteries.
6. Preservation of prehistoric ruins and objects of interest on the public domain.
7. Measures relating generally to Hawaii, Alaska, and the insular possessions of the United States, except those affecting their revenue and appropriations.
8. Irrigation and reclamation, including water supply for reclamation projects, and easements of public lands for irrigation projects.
9. Interstate compacts relating to apportionment of waters for irrigation purposes.
10. Mining interests generally.
11. Mineral land laws and claims and entries thereunder.
12. Geological survey.
13. Mining schools and experimental stations.
14. Petroleum conservation and conservation of the radium supply in the United States.
15. Relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes.

16. Measures relating to the care, education, and management of Indians, including the care and allotment of Indian lands and general and special measures relating to claims which are paid out of Indian funds.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION—NOMINATION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there is on the Executive Calendar one nomination, that of Brig. Gen. Peter A. Feringa, Corps of Engineers, to be president and member of the Mississippi River Commission. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed, and the President notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and without objection, as in executive session, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

PROGRAM FOR THURSDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now move——

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he knows what is to be taken up when the Senate meets on Thursday?

Mr. LUCAS. When the Senate meets on Thursday there is nothing of any major importance to be considered by the Senate. We hope that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service will report the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and myself continuing the Freedom Train for a period of 2 years. It is a nonpartisan measure. A similar measure was introduced in the House by Representatives MCCORMACK and MARTIN of Massachusetts. I doubt if there will be any objection to it. We will take it up for consideration on Thursday next, if meanwhile it is reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think perhaps the Senator from Illinois should add for the information of the Senate that it is the hope of the Committee on Foreign Relations that the nomination of Mr. Webb to be Under Secretary of State will be reported favorably by the committee and will be available for consideration by the Senate on Thursday.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Michigan is correct. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, made a request relating to that nomination a few moments ago, and that nomination will be considered by the Senate on Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be permitted to report the Freedom Train measure during the adjournment of the Senate?

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the distinguished Vice President that such consent has been obtained, on request made by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I am sure that that order was entered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate at this time, I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, January 27, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 24, 1949:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The following-named Foreign Service staff officers to be consuls of the United States of America:

Louis F. Blanchard, of New Mexico.

Louis B. Mazzeo, of the District of Columbia.

Robert C. Brewster, of Nebraska, for appointment as a Foreign Service officer of class 6, a vice consul of career, and a secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States of America.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The following-named officers for promotion in the Regular Army of the United States, under the provisions of sections 502 and 509 of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947. Those officers whose names are preceded by the symbol (×) are subject to examination required by law. All others have been examined and found qualified for promotion.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 24, 1949:

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSIONER

Brig. Gen. Peter A. Feringa, Corps of Engineers, to be president and a member of the Mississippi River Commission.

MONDAY, JANUARY 24, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, in whose strength alone we are made strong, purge our minds of prejudice and help us to withstand any conflicts of this hour. As we face the obligations of our high office enable us to measure up to our urgent duty, sweeping aside every obstacle that doth beset us.

To these ends bless abundantly our Speaker and the Congress; help us that we abuse not our privileges; vouchsafe unto us new light and new guidance that we may serve Thee as Thou deservest, and labor for our country with understanding. In the holy name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 20, 1949, was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House today for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] may have permission to address the House for 30 minutes on February 2, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KILBURN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution passed by the New York State Legislature.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial.

Mr. CURTIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include certain resolutions.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a letter from the Western States Meat Packing Association and in the other to include a statement by Mr. Samuel Moment, of the Bonneville Power Administration.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. RAINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article by Generoso Pope.

Mr. McGUIRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Mr. Jesse Randell, president of the Travelers Insurance Co., at the Hartford Rotary Club, Hartford, Conn.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech delivered by Mr. Justice William O. Douglas. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $165, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech which he delivered at a Jackson Day dinner held in East St. Louis, Ill.

Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech he delivered to the Daughters of the American Revolution at Fredericksburg, Va.

THE LATE LINDLEY HOAG HADLEY

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce the death of a distinguished former Member of this body. Lindley H. Hadley passed away on November 1, 1948, in the State of Connecticut. He is survived by two daughters who now reside in that State.

Lindley Hoag Hadley was born of Quaker parentage in Sylvania, Ind., on June 19, 1861. He attended Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill. For a number of years he followed the teaching profession in the State of Indiana. During this time, he studied law and was admitted to the bar. In September 1890 he moved to New Whatcom, now Bellingham, Wash., to engage in the practice of law with his brother Hiram, who later became a judge of the State Supreme Court of Washington. He was long active in civic and political affairs in Whatcom County.

In 1914 he was elected to Congress from the Second Congressional District of the State of Washington on the Republican ticket and served continuously in this body until 1933. During his long service in the House of Representatives, he was a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries from 1915 to 1919 and the Committee on Ways and Means from 1919 until 1933. During his service on the Committee on Ways and Means, he specialized on various tariff problems.

Lin Hadley was an outstanding and respected leader of his party. He was conscientious and devoted to those principles of government that he thought were best for his country.

I join with Members of this body in expressing our deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I served with Mr. Hadley for many years. We lived in the same hotel, Congress Hall. I certainly subscribe to everything the gentleman from Washington has said about him.

I never met a finer, more patriotic, conscientious Representative since I have been a Member of Congress than Mr. Hadley.

Mrs. Hadley was one of the finest ladies I have ever known, and those charming daughters were loved and admired by every one who knew them.

Our hearts go out to them in their great bereavement.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include in each extraneous matter.

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

GOVERNMENT SERVICE UNIVERSITY

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to establish a Government Service University.

The purpose of this bill is to provide our Government with more qualified men and women in administrative, diplomatic, economic, and other fields of Government work. During the last month or so before I came to Congress I had what I called national affairs forums. At these meetings I suggested various pieces of legislation that I hoped the people would give their opinions upon. On this particular piece of legislation there was a unanimous feeling of approval on the part of my constituents. There are many young people in this country today who are able and qualified for Government service and who would like to make a career of such service, but who do not have the opportunity. Students would be chosen by competitive examinations given by the Civil Service Commission. Tuition and basic living costs would be provided to the Government. Students would agree to work for the Government for a minimum of 10 years after graduation. I hope that you gentlemen will support this bill and thereby help to improve the quality of Government service in your country, which is good, but can yet stand improvement.

THE AUSTRIAN PEACE TREATY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE Mr. Speaker, according to press reports, conversations regarding an Austrian peace treaty are to be resumed on February 7.

I have been reliably informed that the Russian Foreign Office has been working hard for many months in an effort to devise a plan which would induce us to withdraw our troops from Austria.

It appears that the Kremlin is no longer anxious to obtain Carinthia for the fractious Yugoslavs.

It is quite likely that a compromise regarding German assets in Austria will be arrived at. Our conditions may well be met; an Austrian peace treaty is perhaps in the offing.

Mr. Speaker, I need hardly point out the critical value to the western world strategically, economically, and politically of maintaining freedom in Austria. In Austria, freedom's forces thrust some 135 miles behind the iron curtain. The manifold advantages of this position are abundantly clear.

In view of the events of the last few years, particularly in eastern Europe, it seems obvious that once the British, French, and American troops have been withdrawn from Austria, the freedom and independence of that country become precarious indeed.

Were Austria drawn behind the iron curtain the Kremlin would have a common boundary with Italy and would be able to exert tremendous and perhaps fatal pressure upon that country, with consequences which could not fail to affect American national security.

I express the fervent hope that our desire for peace does not lead us into a step which would only weaken our position and thereby multiply the hazards of war.

Surely it is better not to reach an agreement than to agree to a treaty which would render Austria a hostage to a Communist tyranny.

We must think steadfastly in terms of constructive alternatives.

Preponderant evidence points to this present choice: either we remain in Austria with all the unpleasantness and sense of frustration which this involves or we withdraw, thereby ceding vital territory to Russian imperialism and sacrificing more freedom-loving people on the altar of wishful thinking.

The loss of Austria as a bastion of freedom would be a major defeat in our cold conflict with communism.

Let us think carefully before we undertake to nullify still further the tragic cost of the recent war.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star]

THIS CHANGING WORLD—WESTERN ALLIES AND RUSSIA EXPECTED TO SIGN AUSTRIAN PEACE TREATY SOON

(By Constantine Brown)

A peace treaty for Austria is expected to be signed near the end of February by the United States, Britain, France, and Russia.

The main outlines of the treaty were agreed on by the Big Four Foreign Ministers at their London meeting in 1946. But final agreement was prevented by Yugoslavia's territorial demands and the question of payments to Russia for Nazi assets in Austria.

At that time Marshal Tito was Moscow's fair-haired boy. He insisted, and was strongly supported by Foreign Minister Molotov, that Austria yield to Yugoslavia the rich province of Carinthia, which the Balkan dictator claimed should be part and parcel of Yugoslav territory. The Austrians, backed by the western powers, opposed this demand because it lacked any real justification. The matter since has been in abeyance.

DEMANDED $200,000,000

The Russians also demanded about $200,000,000, which they said represented Nazi assets in Austria. The American representatives opposed this demand because they knew that eventually it would have to come out of the pockets of American taxpayers.

The United States suggested that the Soviet delegates be satisfied with $125,000,000. Foreign Minister Molotov turned down this offer for political rather than financial reasons. He insisted that no bargaining was possible until we accepted Tito's territorial claims.

Now that relations between the Yugoslav dictator and the Cominform are strained, Moscow has no interest in furthering the demands of its former puppet, and has indicated indirectly that it is willing to sit at the diplomatic table with the western representatives and the Austrian delegates to discuss the peace treaty on the basis that Carinthia remain Austrian.

As for the Austrian payment for Nazi assets—in cash, goods, and services—it is understood that Moscow is ready to meet us halfway, by accepting $150,000,000.

The prospective signing of a peace treaty between Austria and Hitler's conquerors will be hailed as the first indication in 2 years that, given good will and patience, it is possible to get along with the Russians. This type of publicity is necessary for the morale of the western nations, which have been accustomed for so long to a negative attitude in the Kremlin on all international matters.

But careful analysis of the situation shows that the signature of such a peace treaty is no more indicative of a change of mood on the part of Russia than the agreement on Italy was.

In November 1943, when Secretary of State Hull made a good will trip to Moscow, the Soviet government agreed to consider Austria as outside the Axis circle, provided that the Austrian people show willingness to rid themselves of the Nazis. A declaration to that effect was signed by Mr. Hull, British Foreign Secretary Eden, and Mr. Molotov. Our position in that matter was particularly easy, since we, unlike the Russians, had never recognized the annexation of Austria by Hitler in March 1939.

STRIPPED OF ASSETS

Although the Austrians cooperated with the Allies as soon as it was possible for them to do so, and lived up to our expectations, the Moscow agreement was a dead letter. The Russians insisted on treating Austria as an enemy country, and under the excuse that the Nazis had large assets in the country they stripped the Austrians of some of their most important industrial establishments. But after this was done there was no further reason for the Russians to refuse to sign a peace treaty with Austria which, unlike Germany, had a legal constitutional government.

The treaty which is expected to be signed next month will provide for the evacuation of Austrian territory by the Allied occupation forces. This will mean that we will withdraw our troops—about 8,000 strong—several thousand miles from Austria, while the Russians will withdraw their divisions less than 100 miles.

During the years of occupation Russia has organized, not only in its own sector but also in the western areas, Communist cells which are expected to become active as soon as the treaty has been confirmed by the United States Senate and the other signatories. Unless our observers are unduly pessimistic, it will be difficult for that small Republic to maintain its democratic form of government when all her neighbors are under Communist domination.

These observers predict that within a short time after the Allied forces have left Austria there will be a repetition of the coups we witnessed in Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two short speeches delivered before the Commonwealth Club, of San Francisco.

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include two editorials from the Sioux City Journal.

Mr. ANDERSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from Time magazine.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Pennsylvania Grange about Hawaii.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a consolidation of certain testimony before a congressional committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from Hoard's Dairyman.

Mr. REED of New York (at the request of Mr. WOODRUFF) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short radio address, and further to extend his remarks and include a clipping from the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include articles by former Representative Pettengill.

NATIONAL THEATER, OPERA, AND BALLET

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a bill to provide for a national theater and for a national opera and ballet. The United States almost alone among the great powers does not advance these arts as an official Government activity. For example despite very serious economic problems Great Britain has just found $4,000,000 for its arts council to support a national theater. Great areas of our country are denied the benefit and pleasure of first-rate theater and music because it is no longer economically feasible on a straight profit basis to bring to them these arts and the leading artists. I realize full well the dangers of the paralyzing hand of Government control of the arts, and of the use which can be made of them to control thought, hence my bill provides for a constitutional convention to be called by the President representative of all branches of the theater, opera, and ballet—performers, workers, writers, and audience—to draft and propose plans—but not WPA schemes for unemployment relief—which will deserve Government support while providing for the democratic control of a national theater and a national opera and ballet by the constituent elements so called together. In this way America's riches in dramatic and musical talent may best be developed and our democratic culture served and advanced. The approach taken by this bill has the support of Clarence Derwend, president of Actors Equity Association, Vinton Freedley, president, and C. Lawton Campbell, chairman of the board, of the American National Theater and Academy—ANTA—organized under Federal charter and has also been fully discussed with Lawrence Tibbett, president of the American Guild of Musical Artists.

The bill will be introduced this week in the Senate by Senator IVES, of New York. It is my hope that other Members and Senators will join in supporting it and that it will, as it should, be a bipartisan measure.

"OPERATION HAY"

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a review of "operation hay" as it has been carried on in my district during the last 2 weeks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in these days when we talk about providing funds to establish a national ballet and international programs for the sharing of knowledge, I urge that the House of Representatives and the Congress expedite action to make adequate funds available to meet catastrophic conditions which are taking place in the Western States.

Literally millions of cattle are facing starvation. Literally hundreds and thousands of ranchers are isolated by drifts of snow so that it is impossible for them either to communicate their distress or to get their livestock water or feed. Old-timers say they have never seen anything like this January before.

In this extremity we have been receiving emergency aid from the Air Force and the Army and the Farmers Home Administration as well as the Red Cross. We are also receiving cooperation from the Federal executive branch so as to make some of the President's disaster funds available, but more will be needed as the snow continues to pile up and low temperatures prevail.

In order that the Members of the House may know how emergency feeding operations have been carried on, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a transcript of a radio interview describing "operation hay."

There was no objection.

AID TO STORM-RIDDEN STATES

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, one of the most devastating and unprecedented snowstorms has covered the Western States practically since the 1st of January. It has been snowing intermittently until hundreds of thousands of head of cattle and sheep ar marooned. Losses will be tremendous. I am introducing a resolution today to authorize an appropriation sufficient to lend every assistance possible to all the States that are now in this desperate condition. The Governor of my own State has declared a state of emergency, and all the machinery and manpower necessary is being utilized to meet this situation. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will act expeditiously and make an appropriation available to help these States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

THE STATE OF GEORGIA AND THE INAUGURAL PARADE

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be misunderstood in the remarks that I am going to make. I feel that the great State of Georgia should have had a float in the inaugural parade. I am also quite certain that the great State of Georgia will pay any obligation which she may owe.

However, an article in yesterday's paper has caused some confusion. It states that the Warm Springs Foundation ordered the float and that the builder of the float expected the foundation to pay for it. We are now in the midst of the March of Dimes campaign to help polio victims. That campaign might be hurt if people thought that the Georgia float was paid for out of polio funds, especially since the float was declared to have been a monstrosity. I trust that this point will be cleared up so that it will not interfere with the worthy cause of raising money for the polio funds.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

EMPLOYMENT OF PROFESSIONAL AND CLERICAL STAFFS ON COMMITTEES

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, Public Law 601, passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress, was an act to provide for an increased efficiency in the legislative branch of the Government. Section 202 (a) and (c) reads as follows:

SEC. 202. (a) Each standing committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives (other than the Appropriations Committees) is authorized to appoint by a majority vote of the committee not more than four professional staff members, in addition to the clerical staffs, on a permanent basis without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office and said staff members shall be assigned to the chairman and ranking minority member of such committee as the committee may deem advisable. Each such committee is further authorized to terminate the services by a majority vote of the committee of any such professional staff member as it may see fit. Professional staff members shall not engage in any work other than committee business and no other duties may be assigned to them.

(c) The clerical staff of each standing committee, which shall be appointed by a majority vote of the committee, shall consist of not more than six clerks, to be attached to the office of the chairman, to the ranking minority member, and to the professional staff, as the committee may deem advisable; and the position of committee janitor is hereby abolished. The clerical staff shall handle the committee correspondence and stenographic work, both for the committee staff and for the chairman and ranking minority member on matters related to committee work.

It has come to my attention that the Democratic leadership in the House is violating not only the word but the spirit of the law. This morning the committee of which I am a member—Public Lands—with its Democratic majority passed a resolution permitting the chairman of the committee and the subcommittee chairmen to appoint the professional and clerical staff without the approval of the majority vote of the full committee. I am quite sure that some of the professional staff will be engaged in work other than committee business. It seems certain that instead of employing individuals "without regard to political affiliation and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of office," that this phrase should be replaced by the words "only for deserving Democrats."

I understand that the professional and well-trained personnel of other standing committees in the House are being fired by the Democratic leadership. It is unfortunate indeed that the law passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress is being violated openly and without embarrassment by those in the majority. It is quite apparent that the reorganization bill and law is just so many words and is being twisted and perverted by the Democratic majority in the Eighty-first Congress to fit their own particular needs. I am certain that the people of the country will be the ones who will suffer and the cause of good government will be relegated to the ash can.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PHILBIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances.

BASING POINT SYSTEM

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill which will clarify present uncertainty and confusion concerning the basing point system, which many believe was outlawed by recent decisions of the courts. The proposed bill contains absolute safeguards against illegal conspiracies, combinations, and agreements in restraint of trade, monopoly, and unfair trade practices and competition.

This matter is of utmost importance to New England and particularly to industrial Massachusetts. For many years our industries have purchased raw materials and other products under the basing point system, which in general permits freight absorption by sellers and shippers and insures relatively equal competitive advantages for all regions and sections in the national market. The basing point question is bound up with long-established railroad rate differentials, trade customs and practices, and the entire matter is exceedingly complicated. It may have most serious implications for our various transportation systems.

Most New England business, in fact business throughout the Nation, is very apprehensive that departure from the basing point system will bring distinct and substantial competitive disadvantages which cannot possibly be overcome even by the efficiency of production and very high skill of labor and management. It is asserted by business groups, economists, and experts who have studied the broad intricate ramifications of this question that irreparable damage will be done to our industry, that widespread unemployment will directly ensue, unless our New England industries are able to compete on an equal price basis with competitors in the national field. The available evidence indicates that with basing points eliminated freight costs will increase, industries will be crippled and liquidated or required to move to other localities. Our section depends upon other sections for raw materials and markets. If price basing is eliminated many industries will be unable to survive or will be forced to curtail production and employees so it is believed.

Let me emphasize that I am opposed to monopolies, conspiracies to restrain or impede trade and commerce, cutthroat and unfair competitive methods and, therefore, this bill contains language which will militate against such undesirable and baneful practices. It aims to provide for New England industries a fair and reasonable chance to sell their products in competition with other industries. If this or some similar legislation is not enacted by the Congress and we are forced to conduct business under tortured concepts of various wholly desirable trade regulatory laws, it is stated that we will face economic collapse. I hope that not only our industries and labor but every other class of our people as well will support these efforts to clarify, and if necessary rectify, possible punitive economic pressure against our section, which many believe will affect adversely the prosperity of our industrial, mercantile, agricultural, and laboring people.

I hope it will be possible for various organizations concerned with the welfare of New England—labor, management, governmental, and others—to appear before committees of the Congress to urge a careful study and every prompt remedial action necessary in a situation which could have such dire consequences to New England. I am also urging the executive department of the Government to collaborate in efforts to achieve the objectives of the bill.

The question has been exhaustively studied by the Capehart committee of the other body, which, under the leadership of the able Senator from Indiana, held lengthy hearings and presented certain recommendations.

The capable and distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has already introduced similar legislation in the other body.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on three subjects and include certain statements and excerpts.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement promulgated by the National Grange with reference to agricultural policy and program recommendations. I have an estimate from the Public Printer that this will cost $301. I ask unanimous consent that it be placed in the RECORD notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding and without objection, it may be inserted in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. JUDD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

MEETING OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may sit during the sessions of the House during this Congress when found necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES AND THE INAUGURAL BALL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, probably I should have arisen to a question of personal privilege to answer some of the scathing abuses that have been heaped upon me over the radio and through the press during the last few days.

The President of the United States in his inaugural address had a great deal to say about the dangers of communism abroad. I agree with what he said on that point.

But our country is in more danger from the Reds at home than she is from the ones abroad.

The action of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, the way they went about changing the membership of the Committee on Un-American Activities, was silly, if not stupid. It looks like the hand of Esau and the voice of Jacob. Neither Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, General Grant, Robert E. Lee, Jefferson Davis, or Herbert Hoover could have served on that committee under these rulings.

I have no apology for my fight to protect my country against these enemies within our gates. They are here now busy as bees, and were all during the war.

The Committee on Un-American Activities exposed the greatest spy ring in history. It was not a red herring. It was a Red ring of misrepresentatives of the American people in the State Department.

As long as I am a Member of this Congress, I will fight to expose such treason and demand investigations and prosecution of these enemies within our gates.

These Reds won a great victory when they were permitted to conduct the inaugural ball, and force hundreds of Negroes onto the floor of that ball for the first time in history.

This was the greatest insult ever perpetrated against the white girls of Washington, and the whole country, as for that matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE ECONOMIC REPORT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 5, Public Law 304, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report the following members on the part of the House: Mr. HART, New Jersey; Mr. PATMAN, Texas; Mr. HUBER, Ohio; Mr. BUCHANAN, Pennsylvania; Mr. WOLCOTT, Michigan; Mr. HERTER, Massachusetts; Mr. RICH, Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

BUTTER VERSUS YELLOW OLEOMARGARINE, H. R. 1703

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain extracts and extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the dairy farmers of the Nation who swung their political strength to Harry S. Truman on November 2, thus assuring his election, will be poorly repaid if repeal of all restrictions on yellow oleomargarine is foisted on them.

The President's Economic Report to Congress is being twisted to threaten a death blow to 2,500,000 dairy farm families who supply the Nation with vital livestock products. The suggestion that oleo taxes and license fees be repealed, with which leading dairy and farm organizations agree, is now being interpreted to mean the repeal of all restrictions on the manufacture and sale of yellow oleomargarine. This threat to the existence of the dairy industry is sponsored and financed by only 28 oleomargarine manufacturers, which industrial group seeks to remove all legislative restrictions on the sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter.

Oleo manufacturers want the unrestricted right to sell oleo colored yellow to imitate butter and thus monopolize the table spread market. With butter and dairy prices already declining and pushing down dairymen's income, an additional loss of $250,000,000 a year will mean outright disaster to dairy farmers and their families and to 40,000 small dairy plants and their employees.

Farmers will be forced to slaughter millions of milk cows—an economic body blow to consumers who are dependent on dairy herds for 40 percent of their beef and veal and all of their milk. This can only result in scarcities and high prices for meat, milk and other dairy products. It will also bring to an end the historic soil conservation program practiced on every dairy farm without Government subsidy.

Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill based on a policy that is fair to consumers, fair to retailers and distributors, and fair to the oleo industry. It will protect the vital dairy industry against a complete loss of its crucial butter market to a product using a deceptive coloration to gain economic advantage.

My bill will prohibit the imitation of butter through the manufacture and sale of oleo colored yellow in semblance of butter, but will remove all taxes and license fees on oleo itself. Under my bill every housewife can obtain all the oleo she wants without the payment of any taxes whatever, but the product will be sold for what it is, and not as an imitator of butter. The passage of my bill will protect the consumer against this kind of fraud and deception. The bill is H. R. 1703.

Competent economists estimate that the complete legalization of yellow oleo would take away an additional 600,000,000 pounds a year in butter sales. A loss of this size could cost the farmers of this country immediately a quarter of a billion dollars in annual cash income. The result would be liquidation of dairy herds on a scale never before seen, since small farmers would simply be unable to operate any longer.

Decline in dairy cow numbers as a result of lost butter markets would be heaviest in States depending most on butter as a source of income. For example, there are 18 surplus-milk-producing States where sales of farm-separated cream, largely destined for butter, amount to one-fifth or more of total sales of milk in all forms. Nearly 27 percent of all milk produced in the country normally is churned into butter.

This is what is meant when it is said that butter is the balance wheel of the entire dairy industry. It is dangerous to the economy of the country to jeopardize the existence of all dairy farmers by legalizing the unrestricted sale of oleomargarine colored yellow to imitate butter.

I recognize that it is not popular to oppose any part of Truman's fair-deal program, but when it comes to taking a position on the welfare of 2,500,000 dairy-farm families as against 28 large oleomargarine manufacturers, I take my stand with the dairy farmers of the United States. They are a vital part of our American economy. They pay substantial taxes into the Federal Treasury, and also provide the Nation with vital and nutritious food.

The fight between oleo and butter is an economic battle. It will be argued that dairy farmers must yield to scientific progress. We must all yield to honest scientific progress, but when 28 oleomargarine manufacturers attempt to steal the historic butter color for their synthetic product, I cannot go along on the scientific argument. I want the synthetic product called oleomargarine to be sold for what it is and not as an imitator of butter. The fight this year is over the color yellow. Last year it was over the tax. My bill removes the tax but prohibits the sale of yellow-colored oleomargarine.

The oleo industry is using the housewives of the country to sponsor its program so that it can put out a synthetic product, make it look and taste like butter, and thereby steal the butter market from the dairy farmers of the United States.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. The gentleman, as I understand it, is not opposed to the removal of the tax on oleomargarine?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. My bill provides for the removal of all taxes and fees.

Mr. GRANGER. As a compromise, that is what the gentleman is offering. As I read the Democratic platform and the statements of the President of the United States, I do not see anything in either that is not in harmony with what the gentleman says. The Democratic platform said it was going to remove the tax on oleomargarine. The gentleman proposes to do that. The President has said he wants the tax removed. So there is complete harmony, it seems to me, with the declaration of the President and the Democratic platform.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very glad to have the gentleman's interpretation of the Democratic platform, because he is one of the distinguished leaders on the Democratic side, and he is with the majority. I know when he speaks he speaks with authority.

Mr. GRANGER. I thank the gentleman. One more observation, however. I think the gentleman knows that the oleo interests are today in the chain stores of the country getting individuals to sign post cards to indicate that there is a great grass-roots movement to repeal the tax. I think all of us should be apprised of what is going on, the same tactics that were used last year through the expenditure of millions of dollars to repeal this tax.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad the gentleman brought that matter up. I have a newspaper clipping here from Indianapolis, Ind., showing where the oleo interests not only wrote the letter, but they are also furnishing the letterhead, the envelope, and the postage. The industry is writing and mailing letters for these individual consumers whom they are using as a front to make more money for the oleo industry.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I want to get it clear whether the gentleman's concern is to prevent fraud, to prevent deception, and to prevent any possibility that one might buy oleomargarine in the belief he is buying butter, or whether his concern is to prevent competition for a market, where the public would know what they are buying and where the public made a free choice of colored margarine as against colored butter. Which is the matter of concern with the gentleman?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad the gentleman asked that question because my concern is identical with his concern. He is concerned about the welfare of the cotton farmers of the South. He wants them to secure more money for their cottonseed oil; therefore he proposes in his bill that oleomargarine be colored yellow, after elimination of the tax, so that oleomargarine manufacturers will buy more cottonseed oil at a higher price and sell it to the American people in the form of oleo colored yellow to imitate butter. In other words, my interests are identical with the gentleman's. He is trying to protect the cotton farmers and I have repeatedly assisted him in doing that and I will do it in the future; but when it comes to his misguided effort to try to take away the principal market for the dairy farmers of the country, why, then, we have come to the crossroads of mutual assistance.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman yield further since he has discussed my philosophy?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to make some further remarks.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has discussed what I believe. Now will he not yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will yield after making this next statement.

I think that the gentlemen from the Southern Cotton States are making a big mistake. They are making a big mistake in that they do not realize that the northern dairy farmers are their best buyers for cottonseed meal and the products of cotton. Now, the average family uses about 12 or 14 pounds of butter a year, and to have a little more cottonseed oil used in oleomargarine and sold to the people would not mean a great deal more money, if any, to the cotton farmers for their cottonseed oil.

What has happened to cottonseed-oil prices during these past years? There are 28 large oleomargarine manufacturers. I could easily name them, but time will not permit. I do not hold anything against them, because they are out trying to increase their business. But, what is happening to the price of cottonseed oil in connection with the farmers of the South? When they have cottonseed or cottonseed oil to sell, the oleo and the soap interests go out of the market and let the price go down, where it is today, around 16 cents a pound for the cottonseed oil, and after they have bought it all, then they up the price, so the price range may be 10 cents higher, and they are the ones that make the money out of it, and not the cotton farmers of this country. You can look at the market records year after year and you will find that the 28 oleomargarine manufacturers and the crushers of cottonseed set the market price, and the price goes down at the time the farmer has his cottonseed to sell. The cottonseed-oil industry makes the money on oil and not the cotton farmer.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman if it has not been demonstrated that a lot of false information has gone out by pseudo scientists, but it has never been proven yet that vegetable oil is equal to animal fat; is that not right?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right. I think that Dr. Carlson is one of them.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Not mentioning any names, but it has never been proven yet, and the only experiment that they have conducted has been based on where two dairy products were used in the experiment to try to prove that the vegetable oil is equal to the animal fat.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. If they can throw the dairy industry to the vegetable-oil wolves altogether, it is just the first step, is it not? The next will be the filled ice cream, filled evaporated milk, and filled cream. I would like to have the gentleman discuss that possibility, because a lot of our fluid-milk boys have been going around rather smug and saying it does not make any difference whether you eat oleo or not, but how about this magic mix that is appearing on the market.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That will be the next step, with our dairy cattle, in part, liquidated. The next step will be a synthetic milk, made out of cottonseed oil and skimmed milk.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The genteman found time now to yield to the opponents of this measure. Can he not yield to me?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will in just a moment. I will say to the gentleman from Texas, the South is going extensively into the dairy business.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has already said a good deal, and he yielded for a few questions from the opponents. Will he yield to me?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has already said as I understand it—and I want him to correct me if I am wrong—that his interest in this was to protect the market for the dairy people of the United States.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is what the gentleman said. I did not say that.

Mr. POAGE. All right. That is the gentleman's interest then.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman want me to restate it?

Mr. POAGE. I heard what the gentleman said, and I could not understand it. I thought that is what you meant, and I wanted to get it clear so the Membership of this House could understand whether you were interested in the dairy people or the consumers.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I decline to yield further. I did not yield for a speech, I yielded for a question.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has not yet stated what his interest is.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would be delighted to let the gentleman know. He knows already that my interest is the same as his. No. 1, I want to protect the consumers of the United States from the fraud and deception that can be practiced as a result of legislation he has offered. No. 2, I want to protect the integrity of the greatest group in American agriculture, two and one-half million dairy farm families who are furnishing the milk, meat, and dairy products for the people of the United States at reasonable prices.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman explain how the consumer is not protected when we offer legislation here that requires a printed notice with every serving of margarine that it is margarine?

Will the gentleman explain how that fails to protect the public from fraud and deception?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman's bill is much better than the Rivers bill that was introduced last year, but we can see the objective back of it. The fight again is over the color yellow. It was last year, it was in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and so on, every time it has come up. It is the color, yellow, because the oleomargarine industry wants to steal the historic color away from butter for oleo.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Do I understand it to be the gentleman's proposal that the tax be taken off oleomargarine?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Entirely removed.

Mr. COX. But that the manufacturers be denied the right to color it?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right.

Mr. COX. Do the butter people color their product?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The butter people at certain times of the year do, but it is not done to deceive the people.

Mr. COX. It is put in simply to make it a more attractive product?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is put in to make the butter uniform throughout the year.

Mr. COX. Would the gentleman be willing to apply the same rule that he now proposes shall apply to the manufacturers of oleomargarine to the dairy people, that is, deny the dairy people the right to color their product, the same as the manufacturers of margarine?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the gentleman is making that proposal on behalf of the Members on his side, I say yes, I will agree to it for myself.

Mr. COX. What can there be wrong about that?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is all right with me. I am glad to hear that offer come from the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman that people producing one product should not be permitted to deceive the consumers into thinking they are getting an entirely different product.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is a possibility of that. I recognize that my friend from Texas has tried in his bill to correct that, but people do not generally follow the law, or a good many of them. We have restaurants and hotels in the United States that serve 65,000,000 meals a day in public eating places. Generally the people go in there and pay for butter and they expect to get it, but they may be served with yellow oleo despite the notice my friend from Texas requires when yellow oleo is served.

Mr. COX. How can the gentleman justify permitting the dairy people to color their product and denying that right to the manufacturers of margarine?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am willing to concede that.

Mr. COX. In other words, the gentleman wants to outlaw a practice which deceives the public.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Butter is not colored to deceive anyone, while the purpose of coloring oleo yellow is to make it look like butter, to imitate butter, so that it fools the public.

Mr. COX. I am disposed to agree with the gentleman in the accuracy of the statement he has just made, that the butter people probably use coloring to make a more attractive product.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No, to make it uniform throughout the year. There are certain times of the year, as in June, when the cattle are out on grass, hence the color is more yellow.

Mr. COX. Why should the dairy people be permitted to use coloring and others be denied that right?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They can make oleomargarine out of coal, pulpwood, and petroleum products; they can make it out of most anything. Science is wonderful. The gentleman would not advocate that they should do that or permit that to be colored yellow, would he?

Mr. COX. I certainly would not advocate imposing a tax upon a domestic product and denying it the right to compete with a different product.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman want to injure the dairy business of the country?

Mr. COX. No; I do not want to injure the dairy people. I want to see the dairy people prosperous.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Good. And you want the dairy business to increase in the State of Georgia, do you not?

Mr. COX. Yes; I do.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. And it is going to. There are farmers from your State and from nearly every Southern State, who are in favor of the legislation that I am offering. You are trying to build up the dairy industry in the South. If the gentleman was on our Committee on Agriculture today he would find out about the disastrous situation facing cotton. You must get into diversification.

Mr. COX. I would go along with the gentleman, were he to advocate a measure taking the tax off oleomargarine and denying both the manufacturers of oleomargarine and butter the use of coloring with a view of creating a false impression.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman think that having butter look the same throughout the entire year creates a false impression?

Mr. COX. Is it not put in for the purpose of engendering the idea that it is a product of a richer and more desirable character?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; it is only put in during the winter months.

Mr. COX. Why is it put in then?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is put in during the winter months when the cattle are off the pasture, so as to give the butter a uniform color throughout the year, and that is the truth.

I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. There is a tremendous distress among the people who milk cows; and in the great dairy States they are wondering what they can do to help some of these poor dairymen out of the situation that they are in. Imagine, hay is now $80 a ton and cottonseed cake is from $80 to $100 a ton, and here we are proposing today to make it more difficult for these people to get anywhere. It seems to me that the time is absolutely inopportune to place a greater burden on the dairy people. I am speaking about the fellow who milks the cows. They are the people after all, they are the ones out in the hinterlands in every congressional district in the country, who build the country roads and maintain the schools.

Why anybody would want to do anything to make their burden heavier, I am unable to understand.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman and thank him for his statement, because after all it demonstrates that in the United States we are coming to the proposition where there is an economic fight going on between two groups of American citizens, which should not exist at all in this country. I have been on the Committee on Agriculture for over 22 years. During all of my service on that committee we have worked together as a unit and there has been no political dividing line and never was until this proposal came up.

The South against the North—it should not be, because you need our help and we need your help to maintain a strong economy for agriculture in the United States.

If agriculture goes down in this country, then the entire country will go down.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief comment?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. COX. It would appear to me that the gentleman in the proposal that he now offers is at least approaching a fair solution of this controversial question.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think it is a fair solution. It gets down to the crux of the problem and that is the color of the product. The oleo industry wants to color their product yellow, to make it look like butter, and that affords the possibility of fraud and deception. The primary objective of the oleo industry is to make more money by taking the spread market from the dairy farmers of the United States.

That, my friends, will bring ruin and disaster, not only to the dairy farmers, but also to the entire country, because our dairy farmers use 27 percent of their milk to make butter. If they do not have that outlet, they will have to liquidate their dairy herds and go into other types of production like soybeans and other crops. It will ruin their soil-conservation program, which has been historic on every dairy farm, and it will not only mean the liquidation of the livestock, but in the end it will mean higher prices for milk and meat to the American consumers, because the dairy farmers of today supply 40 percent and more of the meat that is used in the United States and all dairy products. If you liquidate a great portion of our milk-cow population—we have lost over 3,000,000 head in the last 3 or 4 years—in the end the consumer will pay dollars and dollars more where they might be saving a few cents because they can buy yellow-colored oleomargarine.

So the issue is far greater than just the coloring of yellow oleomargarine. The issue extends to the economy of the entire country. I say this because 25 percent of the diet of the people comes from dairy products and livestock. Therefore we should try to carry out what the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, has said; farmers should produce more milk cows, more beef cattle and hogs. But if you put through something like the legislation proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] that permits the coloring of oleomargarine to make it look like butter, you destroy the very industry that should be built up in the United States to consume the corn and the feed that is produced in abundance. It will also stop the expansion of the dairy industry in the South, where you need it so much in order to replace cotton production.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I was interested in the interpretation which the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] placed on the Democratic platform, in view of the fact that he, among the Democratic members of the Committee on Agriculture, stood alone on that committee last year, and the way in which nearly all Members voted on this question when it came before the House. Does their action in the past seem consistent with the interpretation which the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] has placed on that platform?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I was glad to get that interpretation from him. I hope that is the correct interpretation, because, if it is, then the President would veto any bill that would come to him to permit oleomargarine to be colored to make it look like butter.

Furthermore, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] is a man who thinks about the entire economy of the country—the economy of agriculture. He tries to figure out how the different components of agriculture fit into the picture. He recognizes the importance of the dairy industry in this country and the nutritious value of the vital products that come from the dairy cow. Of course, there are some who would give a quart of milk to every person in the world. Well, it cannot be done from the United States. We have 3,000,000 less milk cows now than we had in 1944. Milk-cow population is going down and the human population is increasing by leaps and bounds. If you want to drive the little dairy farmers of the country out of business, all you have to do is to pass legislation that will permit 28 oleomargarine manufacturers to color their product yellow, to make it look like butter. That is the only reason they want that law passed, in order to make more money. I think the time has come for the House to take a stand on this proposition, whether or not you are for 2,500,000 dairy farmers in this country who are providing the vital dairy products for the people, or for the oleo industry, that only desires to make more money. If the oleo manufacturers succeed with their scheme it will wreck the dairy industry and our American economy.

I have before me an advertisement which appeared in the Memphis Press-Scimitar of December 13, 1948, and the Memphis Commercial Appeal on December 14, 1948, signed by 29 farm and dairy organizations in the South itself. It well states the position of small-business men and farmers in regard to the butter-oleomargarine controversy.

[From the Memphis (Tenn.) Press-Scimitar and Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal of December 13-14, 1948]

BUTTER AND THE SOUTH

Widespread fraudulent substitution of yellow oleomargarine for butter must be prevented. This can be done by a flat ban on the imitation of butter through the commercial manufacture or sale of yellow oleomargarine.

Such a ban would enable Congress and the State legislatures to remove all taxes and license fees now imposed on the butter substitute and still protect consumers.

The commercial-yellow ban would permit housewives to obtain all the oleomargarine they want for home use in its most economical uncolored form, without payment of any taxes whatsoever.

A policy to this effect was proposed by representatives of three leading dairy organizations on October 26, 1948. This policy has since been ratified separately by members of the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, the American Butter Institute, and the National Creameries Association. The National Grange has expressed its agreement in principle. These organizations represent virtually all dairy farmers who produce milk or cream for sale in commercial channels. They total 25 percent of all the farmers in America.

This policy would abolish all fees and reporting requirements for oleo retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers. Hospitals and other institutions could buy uncolored oleo without license or tax.

At the same time, a ban on imitation butter would curb unfair competition for the butter market, so vital to successful dairying in the South as elsewhere.

The Food and Drug Administration has opposed the addition of artificial colors, as well as spices and other substances, which result in giving food a deceptive appearance.

BUTTER IS VITAL TO THE SOUTH

The dairy industry is more important to the southern farmer—and to the southern consumer—than all the oleomargarine ever manufactured. It supplies all of our milk, half of our beef and veal, and one-fourth of our total food consumption.

The dairy farmer does not seek to deprive anyone of butter substitutes. But the manufacture and sale of oleo colored yellow in imitation of butter leads to "butterlegging"—the passing off of oleo as butter, at butter prices. This reduces the income of the southern farmer and businessman, and hurts the consumer.

Only one-third of 1 percent of the farmers' cash income in leading cotton States can be traced to oleomargarine. On the other hand, oleomargarine is a definite threat to southern markets for dairy products, lard, vegetable shortening (with which oleo competes), and cottonseed meal sold as feed for dairy cattle. To the Cotton Belt farmer, these markets are 28 times as important as the oleo market, as shown by the following table:

Cash income to farmers in 1946

| State | From oleomargarine | From products competing with oleomargarine |
|---|---|---|
| Alabama | $1,919,000 | $30,956,000 |

Help your farm neighbors and protect your own pocketbook as well. Support the ban on the imitation of butter by oleomargarine colored yellow in semblance of butter. Let butter substitutes sell on their own merits, without butter's naturally yellow color.

It must be remembered that this controversy is, in part, a struggle between small business and big business. The 40,000 dairy plants and the 2,500,000 dairy farmers in this country, many of them situated in the South as elsewhere, are essentially small business organizations. The cottonseed oil and oleomargarine interests, by contrast, are very big business, indeed. Much of their ownership is closely held by absentee capital operating in the East and Middle West, and even from abroad.

This advertisement shows, moreover, that the aggregate income to small-business men and farmers in the South from dairy products competing with oleomargarine is far above and beyond the comparatively small returns from the butter substitutes.

BUTTER IS VITAL TO THE SOUTH

Only one-third of 1 percent of the farmers' cash income in leading cotton States can be traced to oleomargarine. On the other hand, oleomargarine is a definite threat to southern markets for dairy products, lard, salad oils, and vegetable shortening, with which oleo competes, and cottonseed meal sold as feed for dairy cattle everywhere. To the Cotton Belt farmer these markets are 28 times as important as the oleo market.

The dairy industry is more important to the southern farmer—and to the southern consumer—than all the oleomargarine ever manufactured. It supplies the Nation with all of its milk, 40 percent of its beef and veal, and provides the second largest source of farm income to the South. The dairy farmer, in addition, is one of the best customers of the cotton farmer, who gets half again as much for his cottonseed meal when sold for dairy cattle feed as he gets for the cottonseed oil he sells to oleomargarine manufacturers. Soybean growers get 2½ times as much income from soybean meal sold for dairy-cattle feed as they get from the soybean oil sold for oleomargarine. In the face of these figures, it is hard to understand why the southern farmer should want to cut his own throat for the benefit of the absentee ownership that controls the oleomargarine industry in this country.

A certain element of southern business wants increased markets and increased prices for its cottonseed oil. It believes that the oleomargarine market promises to offer those increases. To foster the oleo market, that element is willing to encourage the possibility of fraud and deception against the American consumer by demanding the right to color oleomargarine yellow in imitation of butter.

OLEOMARGARINE OPENS THE DOOR TO FOREIGN IMPORTS

The oleomargarine manufacturers are willing to go still further. They are willing to sacrifice cotton growers, who derive benefit from the dairy industry, without in any way helping them. The facts are that for three decades there has been a market for every pound of edible oil in the manufacture of shortening and salad dressing. In fact, in each of the years 1935–37, it was necessary to import as much as 100,000,000 pounds of edible cottonseed oil from outside the country to satisfy these needs.

Much cottonseed oil is now being diverted to oleomargarine, leaving an increased vacuum to be filled by other low-priced imported vegetable oils for other products. There is little difference between the formula for vegetable shortenings and the formula for oleomargarine. A difference of only one-fourth of a cent a pound is enough to divert oil from one product to another and, to the modern chemist, it is a simple problem to use such oils interchangeably.

In case some of the gentlemen in this House may not understand why I raise this point, may I digress long enough to explain the essential difference in pricing dairy products as against commercial oils and fats. Over the years the dairy farmer, to obtain full value from his milk, has learned to sell on a classified basis. Fluid milk brings in the highest price, then cream, then evaporated milk, then butter and cheese. There are many variants of the system by which he obtains the maximum return from his product, but classification is the heart of all of them.

The benefits of such classification have not been made available to producers of cottonseed oil, though the peanut growers have used the method to advantage. For example, there is one price to peanut shellers and another to crushers, irrespective of grade. The producer of cottonseed gets no such classified price, and neither does the crusher. The cotton oil mill still sells crude oil on a blind-broker basis. The manager of such a mill does not know and may not care what his oil is used for, even though the profits of their eventual conversion may be greater for one product or another, depending on the season and its circumstance.

Nor does the independent mill owner know whether the price of the tank of oil he is selling is being bid down by another mill operating as part of a chain. The syndicate mill can absorb losses in the added profits it makes by taking the conversion market away from the independents. Any loss shown by the mill is merely a bookkeeping item in that case.

So, out of a tank of oil produced perhaps in the district represented by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE], a part may be used for vegetable shortening after it reaches its northern destination, and a part may go into salad oil, and the remainder may be used for oleomargarine. The grower has no way of knowing what becomes of it or how much its eventual use may bring. He gets the same low price under every circumstance. With a constant shortage of cottonseed oil for edible purposes, it is not possible for any current or expanded sale of oleomargarine to put a single extra penny into the pockets of the American cottonseed oil producers. The same thing applies to the producers of domestic soybean oil.

MONEY TALKS

It is true that for the year 1947 the oleomargarine industry, as represented by only 28 major manufacturers, is known to have spent $6,600,000 for advertising directed in part toward the repeal of oleo restrictions according to Tide magazine. It is true that in 1948, when they thought their battle was all but won, they nevertheless spent an additional $5,400,000 to mislead American housewives on the question of yellow oleomargarine, according to the same publication. It is true that the impact of these millions of dollars of advertising revenue has been reflected by columns of favorable news and editorial comment in return

It is true that Congressmen have been subjected to a barrage of synthetic mail signed by employees of oleomargarine manufacturing concerns, who received suggestions as to what sort of letters their employers wanted them to write. It is true that oleo companies have furnished the stationery for such letters, addressed the envelopes, stamped them, and mailed them in great quantities. It is true that State legislatures have been swamped with petitions for oleo-tax repeal for which, in Ohio at least, the persons who circulated them received 10 cents a name. Many such petitions were circulated by newsboys on their paper routes, and it is possible that the housewives who signed them were merely being charitable.

Money talks; yes. But no oleo money talks loud enough to drown out the fact that milk and its products constitute the largest single source of farm income. And no amount of paid propaganda can conceal the fact that 26.9 percent of all milk in commerce is consumed in the form of butter. Without adequate butter outlets, it is impossible for the Nation to maintain a stable and profitable dairy industry. No advertising expenditure in the world can explain to the American housewife the scarcities and high prices for milk and meat that would result from an oleo monopoly of the market for spreads.

More than 25 percent of all the food consumed annually in this country is produced by the dairy industry. The dislocation of that industry through unfair competition from imitation butter would cost the consumer millions. Mr. Speaker, I say again that this would be too great a price to pay for cheaper oleo—even if the unrestricted use of yellow coloring were to lower the price of oleomargarine, which it would not.

Oleomargarine propaganda does not mention that 24 States have on their statute books legislation restricting the sale of colored products, and that repeal of the Federal restrictions on yellow oleo would not affect States' rights in this matter. These States have heavy concentrations of industrial population and are natural targets for the 28 big oleomargarine manufacturers, who produce and distribute the bulk of this product. As the oleomargarine lobby itself say, "So long as Federal restrictions upon the manufacture and sale of margarine are continued in effect, State restrictive laws are more difficult to remove."

Repeal of Federal restrictions on oleo, therefore, may be considered as an initial attack on the State laws of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, Alabama, Florida, and Missouri.

However, in certain of these States circumstances have developed that give rise to a question as to the effectiveness of several of these statutes, for example:

In Alabama the attorney general of that State, in an opinion given in 1944, stated that the Alabama code did not prevent the sale of colored oleo in that State.

In Florida the State supreme court held in an opinion rendered December 8, 1944, that where oleo was sold under the original natural color of the oil used as a base—even though the oil had bleached out during the refining process and annoto had to be added to restore color—it was not within the statute prohibiting the sale of any spurious preparation purporting to be butter.

In Maine the attorney general of that State, in an opinion given June 1, 1948, stated that yellow oleo could be sold in Maine if properly labeled and identified.

In Missouri the attorney general of that State, in an opinion given June 29, 1948, stated that yellow oleo could be sold in Missouri if the containers or cartons had printed thereon the word "oleomargarine."

In Maryland dealers are selling colored oleo on advice received from their State health department, food and drug division, that oleo is not a substitute made or colored to resemble natural butter as prohibited by the Maryland law. The State's attorney of Montgomery County has a test case under advisement at this writing.

MISLEADING PROPAGANDA AS TO COLOR

Oleomargarine manufacturers are further guilty of leading the public to believe that their product is naturally yellow in color. They infer that Federal restrictions force the removal of this color by bleaching, and that the housewife is unfairly required to restore it. Butter, they say, is colored with the same dyes with which oleo is colored; and restraints on their use of the yellow color is unjustified discrimination.

The facts are that it is impossible to make a naturally yellow oleomargarine out of domestic oils. The Armour Research Foundation of the Illinois Institute of Technology has revealed the results of scientific tests in this respect. When cottonseed oils are turned into fat they become tattle-tale gray. When soybean oils are turned into fat they become a murky green. They are then bleached, not because of the Federal laws, but to remove undesirable odors, flavors, and colors.

Laboratory analyses of hydrogenated soybean or cottonseed oils, the domestic oils generally utilized in commercial production of oleomargarine, indicate that, regardless of whatever other qualities oleo may or may not have, it does not in the least resemble natural butter in its original state as far as color is concerned.

A small percentage of winter butter is colored, of course. However, when color is added to butter, it is for purposes of uniformity and not with the idea of deception and fraud in trying to make butter look like something which it is not. Would the oleo manufacturers want to color their product yellow if butter was naturally pink?

Certainly not. Their demand for yellow is based solely on a desire to imitate butter's naturally yellow color.

OLEOMARGARINE IS A SYNTHETIC PRODUCT

We must remember that oleomargarine is a contrived product of uncertain ancestry. It can be and has been made of fish oil, animal fats, tallow, waste packing-house byproducts, and vegetable oils both domestic and imported. To say that oleo is the nutritional equivalent of butter is to say that horsemeat is the nutritional equivalent of prime roast beef. The statement might be technically true, but it is morally dubious.

Foreign chemists have made oleo successfully from wood pulp and even from coal. Already we are witnessing a return of imported oils, such as coconut and palm-kernel oils. These imports will increase if price advantages warrant. There is no assurance whatever that American oleo will continue to be made from cottonseed and soybean oils. It is fun to be fooled, but not at the expense of diet or health.

In any case, the processing of oleo requires the deodorizing of some oils, the removal of unpleasant off-tastes from others, and bleaching to give a uniform white base for the addition of color. Diacetyl must be added to imitate butter's taste. Vitamin A, which is extracted from shark livers, must be added to imitate butter's nutrition. Milk must be added to oleo to imitate butter's texture. The use of yellow would be the final step toward fraud and deceit by imitating butter's color.

The repeal of the Federal restrictions on yellow oleomargarine would lay the consumer open to substitution on every hand. The markets would be wide open to adulterations and imitations of every kind. Many outlets for butter as a quality product would be destroyed—and that is exactly what the oleomargarine manufacturers want. They want, not part of the market for spreads used on bread, nor most of that market, but all of the market. In other words, they want to destroy the dairy industry and secure a monopoly for their synthetic product.

DAIRY HERDS ENDANGERED

If the Congress takes action to permit the manufacture and sale of oleo colored yellow to look like butter, what will be the effect on the dairy farmers? The lost butter market will be felt first by two and one-half million farmers, many of whom only milk from three to six cows. These farmers and their families depend upon widely distributed local creameries, cheese plants, condensers, and milk plants, totaling more than 40,000 establishments, for almost their only weekly cash income.

During the flush season, cows produce about 50 percent more milk than in winter, while consumption remains about the same. A large percentage of this surplus must go into butter. Indeed, almost 27 percent of all milk produced in this country is thus used, as I have said. Without butter outlets for surplus milk, the small dairy farmers will have no alternative but to reduce their herds, with far-reaching results.

If Federal controls over yellow oleo are repealed, I foresee that the reduction of dairy herds within the next 3 years will have a disastrous effect on the agricultural economy. We lost nearly a million dairy cows between January 1, 1947, and January 1, 1948. This was the sharpest decline in dairy-cow numbers ever recorded in a single year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

This drop in milk-cow population will soon be severely felt in those cities which now depend upon abundant supplies of fluid milk and will hurt the very consumers to whom the oleo manufacturers now appeal. Any possibility of savings from cheaper oleo will be reflected many times over in the consumer's increased milk bill. Surplus milk which finds no outlet in butter will be cheap for a while, then farmers will sell their cows and turn to other types of production or even to other occupations.

With increased population and increased demands for milk, a further reduction in dairy herds will produce milk shortages. Higher prices for milk will be inevitable. Higher prices for meat will be equally inevitable, since about 40 percent of our meat supply comes from dairy herds. If this vicious trend is to be continued, we can easily be reduced from our traditional American meat and milk products diet to a subsistence diet of grain and synthetic foods.

Filled milk, filled cheese, and other filled dairy products using cottonseed oil instead of milk fat would follow as a matter of course. In Mexico, a synthetic product consisting of skim milk and cottonseed oil is already being made and sold in bottles. Filled condensed milk has been canned in Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri. Do we want a peon diet for our own children? In Texas certain manufacturers are already substituting cottonseed oil for butterfat in ice cream, and a move is under way to make this deception legal. Where does that leave the dairy farmer?

A shift in production to soybean and other soil-depleting crops would be unavoidable. This, in turn, would mean larger appropriations from Congress to meet our increasing soil-conservation needs and to match the job once taken over without subsidy by our Nation's dairy farmers. The end would be disastrous for farmers and city folk alike, and would endanger the economy of our country.

DAIRY FARMERS ARE NOT PROFITEERS

Yet dairy farming is the backbone of diversified modern agriculture. Manufactured dairy products are a necessary outlet for milk which cannot be sold in bottles, and butter continues to be a product upon which the dairy farmer relies for his livelihood. It is a product which both farmer and consumer must be able to count upon—a quality product which is both a food and a flavor.

From the consumers' standpoint, the law must give protection against fraud and misrepresentation in the substitution of colored oleomargarine for butter. The oleo manufacturers will tell you that there is no other parallel in our laws of one food product being protected against another food product. The answer is that no other type of merchandise affords even a close parallel for comparison.

The monetary incentive to sell colored oleo at the price of and in the guise of butter is absolutely unique. With the quantities of butter sold so huge and a price spread between oleo and butter, there would be tremendous incentive for substitution and fraud if the unrestricted sale of yellow oleomargarine were permitted.

THE NEW DAIRY POLICY

Widespread fraudulent substitution of yellow oleomargarine for butter must be prevented. This can be done by a flat ban on the imitation of butter through the commercial manufacture or sale of yellow oleomargarine. Such a ban would enable Congress and the State legislatures to remove all taxes and license fees now imposed on the butter substitute and still protect consumers.

Such a ban would permit housewives to obtain all the oleomargarine they want for home use in its most economical uncolored form, without payment of any taxes whatsoever. At the same time, a ban on imitation butter would curb unfair competition for the butter market, so vital to successful dairying in the South as elsewhere.

A policy to this effect was proposed by representatives of three leading dairy organizations on October 26, 1948. This policy has since been ratified separately by members of the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, the American Butter Institute, and the National Creameries Association, and the major national dairy-cattle breeders' associations. The National Grange has expressed its agreement in principle, as have many State farm bureaus. I can say with confidence that a majority of all organized farmers in America are behind this policy.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill which provides for those objectives and which, I believe, will receive the approval of every fair-minded Member of this House. It is fair to consumers, because it allows the removal of all taxes and sales restrictions on oleomargarine. It is fair to oleo retailers and wholesalers, because it permits the elimination of all license fees and reporting requirements. Finally it is fair to the dairy farmer. This bill urges a ban on the unfair commercial imitation of butter to insure fair competition for an industry that is vital to national employment, national income, and our national standard of living.

BUTTER INDUSTRY'S VIEWS ON OLEO

TO THE EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Your editorial of January 13, Yellow as Butter, seems to favor repeal of the internal revenue laws which effectively have regulated the manufacture and sale of yellow oleomargarine but does not advocate any effective means of protecting consumers from fraud and deception, if these are repealed.

Naïveté does not generally characterize your editorials but your statement, "All oleomargarine, no matter where or how sold, should be labeled as such" achieves a new high for ingenuousness.

It is a fact well known by food enforcement officials that there are certain basic deceptions which are sometimes employed in the preparation of foods which are not correctible by any form of label statement. The use of artificial color for the purpose of simulating a valuable food probably is the foremost example of this type of deception.

Item 1. The Food and Drug Administration throughout its rulings has been sensitive to the deception caused by the use of artificial yellow color in foods which makes them appear to contain eggs. The use of yellow color is forbidden in such foods as macaroni and noodle products, mayonnaise and salad dressings.

Item 2. The circuit court of appeals has upheld the Food and Drug Administration in its contention that white poppy seeds artificially colored to resemble more valuable Dutch blue and Turkish grey poppy seeds, are adulterated.

Item 3. In a 1940 opinion (still valid) the Food and Drug Administration said, "Bakery products, or any other food containing pumpkin, which gives the appearance of having an egg content when no eggs are present, or a greater egg content than is the case, would be an adulterated article under any form of labeling."

A truthful label statement that artificial color had been added would not be a successful defense to a charge of adulteration in any of the above illustrations. Yet, inadequate regulation of yellow oleo would relegate any of the above adulterated foods to the chicken-feed class as a source of booty to the unscrupulous because of the large margin of profit involved and the closeness of the resemblance of yellow oleo and butter in appearance and taste.

Your statement that some butter is artificially colored is a yellow herring. Butter never is colored to make consumers believe it is oleo.

The sound principle upon which the dairy industry's new policy is based was once expressed by a Food and Drug official who after 30 years' experience in protecting consumers from deleterious foods and economic fraud said, "It is our experience in law enforcement that the purchaser is guided many, many times in the identity of a product, by its flavor, its appearance, its physical properties, regardless of what statements are made on the label, with respect to artificiality or coloring, as the case may be; and it is one of the fundamentals of law-enforcement procedure that such effects, resulting from appearances and flavors, when they are deceptive are not correctible by label declaration."

Do not minimize the fraud potential inherent in removing the effective protection which has been afforded housewives by the revenue laws. It grieves me to see the Star running with the pack on this issue. It would seem your really great newspaper should be in the van, endorsing legislation which will give consumers a decent measure of protection, if the tax on yellow oleo is to be removed.

[From the Soybean Digest of January 1949]

SOYBEAN OIL IS LOSING MARGARINE MARKET

Soybean oil stands second in quantity among oils used in margarine the first three quarters of 1948. This, of course, is not news. Soybean oil has been second on the list of margarine oils for a number of years. The news is that the quantity gap between soybean oil and cottonseed oil, in first place, is widening.

Some years during the war soybeans supplied almost as much oil to the margarine industry as did cottonseed. But the first 9 months of last year soybean oil constituted only 35.5 percent of the oils going into margarine. Cottonseed furnished 59.8 percent.

Part of the reason for the shift away from soybean oil in the margarine market is the greater availability of all vegetable oils. Buyers are in position to be more choosy. So while soybean oil is finding a wider field among industrial users, it is losing ground relatively as an ingredient of a higher-value product—margarine.

This development gives point to the need for pushing ahead with basic research on the cause and cure of soybean-oil reversion, which is its chief handicap with margarine. We have mentioned this need here many times before. If soybean oil is to compete on equal terms in the high-value field, its weaknesses need to be known and corrected. Such action cannot wait.

The high-value markets are the ones that will support a good price for soybean oil—and soybeans. Once lost, they will be much more difficult to regain.

[From the St. Cloud (Minn.) Times]

THE FIGHT ON OLEO

Early in the Eightieth Republican-controlled session of Congress a few oleo manufacturers launched a multi-million-dollar attack against the dairy farmers of the United States.

The Republican Congress had expressed its displeasure with such things as the Democratic farm program and reciprocal trade agreements, so the oleo manufacturers probably thought that the chances were good to put a law through so that they might distribute and actually sell oleo in a color that would look like butter. Their sole objective was to remove the 10 cents a pound Federal tax on oleo colored yellow to masquerade as butter. The sheer force which came near to brutality of oleo's onslaught kept the dairy farmers on the defensive throughout the session. If Congress had not adjourned without finishing a lot of its work, the oleo people might have won out.

As Hoard's Dairyman says, some newspaper editors and other oleo fellow travelers have either innocently or intentionally misinterpreted the new dairy stand. They have surreptitiously played up the portion of the stand that agrees to the removal of all Federal taxes, licenses, and license fees, and have purposely overlooked the fact that the removal of these levies will not be agreed to until yellow oleo has been wiped from the map of the United States. The first action must be absolute abolition and prohibition of the sale and manufacture of fraudulent yellow oleo. When this has been accomplished and enacted into law then, and only then, will the dairy farmers be ready to remove the long-standing Federal levies. This is as it should be. Many States have been following this procedure for several years. They have within their boundaries prohibited the sale and manufacture of fraudulent yellow oleo.

Now the substance of all this is that the oleo industry will not sell its product in its color and on its own merits unless forced to do so by legislation. Enactment of such legislation is the intention of the dairy industry during the 1949 session of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] has expired.

WILLIAM A. JUMP

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I announce with the deepest regret the death of Mr. William A. Jump, one of the most efficient officials of the Government and one of the Nation's greatest public servants.

During his long and faithful service with the Department, Mr. Jump served under 11 Secretaries of Agriculture. In 1947 he received the Department's distinguished service award for outstanding service and leadership in the advancement of public administration.

For several years he served as the United States representative on the Subcommittee on Finance of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

Mr. Jump began his career in the Bureau of Animal Industry, and was promoted regularly, becoming personal secretary in 1921 to the then Secretary of Agriculture, Henry C. Wallace. In 1922, during the Harding administration, Mr. Jump was appointed budget officer for the Department, a post which he held continuously thereafter.

Widely known both inside and outside the Federal Government as an outstanding leader in the advancement of public administration, Mr. Jump was a prominent advocate of many improvements in the Federal budgetary and management practices.

Throughout his career as the Department's liaison officer, Mr. Jump was in close contact with Members of the Congress, earning praise for his able handling of the agency's budget matters.

I recall that some years ago when Mr. Jump had rendered particularly valuable service to my subcommittee we voted to increase his salary. He declined, saying such an increase would be disproportionate to the other salaries paid in his department. It is the only instance within my knowledge when an employee of the Government declined an increase in compensation.

On his recent retirement I wrote to him expressing regret at his leaving the Department and my deep appreciation of the great service he had rendered the committee and the Congress and the Nation. In reply he wrote just a day or two before his death:

JANUARY 17, 1949.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,
Chairman, House Committee on Appropriations.

Dear Mr. CANNON: I cannot tell in the brief space of a note how much your letter of December 22, 1948, meant to me. You probably did not know at the time your letter was written that my retirement from Government service was due to critical illness. I have known since June that I had cancer of the liver, but the suddenness with which I became completely disabled was a surprise.

There has been nothing in my lifetime that has made a deeper impression on me than my frequent and close contact with the congressional appropriations committees of Congress. During the 30 years I have appeared before these committees I have learned to have an entirely different viewpoint on the quality and functioning of the Congress from that which, it seems to me, is most unfortunately held by the general public. I have found Congress to be not weak as the public sometimes seems to believe nor muddle-headed as is the viewpoint often expressed by segments of the public. On the contrary, I have found that Congress is generally strong and generally sound, and working upon a final discovery in the best public interest of a solution of the great pending questions of the day. Their success in finding these solutions, when you consider the enormous ramifications of current times when things legislative have grown and moved away from simplicity and assumed overwhelming complexity, is truly remarkable. The Congress is not perfect any more than other parts of the American scene are perfect, but it is so much better than the American people either believe it to be that it is a shame that this disparity between fact and theory prevails. I say this not in defense of Congress as an institution but as a commendation and urgent need for the general public to find its greatest dependability in the execution of legislative affairs. It is the public itself that is the loser in its inability to grasp the significance of Congress in the whole scheme of economics, continuation of liberty and proper execution of a number of the most important constitutional requirements under our American system. The public seems to be awake on this point and indeed I believe they are making progress on grasping what things are all about. My 30 years before Congress has led me to believe that there is not a single thing of such fundamental importance as for the people to grasp fully their great dependence on the legislative system.

I have tremendously enjoyed my congressional relationships. If I had my time to go over I would try to make them even more useful and effective. I have also enjoyed and place the highest value on the confidence which has been shown me over the years by the Committee on Appropriations.

My best wishes for the future go out to both the House and Senate committees, and I hope the problems that now seem to be unsoluble will quickly turn out to be an enigma of the past, and that the American people will come to the highest general appreciation of these great instruments of government for which our Constitution provides.

With personal good wishes to all of the members of the committees and subcommittees with which I have dealt, and especially my personal good wishes to you and the other chairmen involved, I remain,

Sincerely,

W. A. JUMP.

Active for many years in his professional field, he was a member of the organization committee which led to the establishment of the American Society for Public Administration. He also worked on a committee of the American Political Science Association, a unit promoting closer relations between members of the association and Federal, State, and local government public officials.

Mr. Jump was widely recognized for his professional abilities and was frequently asked to give lectures and special courses at various universities and colleges, including Harvard, Princeton, University of North Carolina, Mount Holyoke College, and American University.

A short time before his death, Mr. Jump, in response to many messages and tributes from his colleagues, wrote a farewell message to his associates in the Department of Agriculture, in which he said:

There is no finer place in America than the Department of Agriculture in which to grow up and spend a lifetime, as I have done. I feel that I have been most fortunate in having had that privilege.

Not a week passes that I am not stimulated by some fresh evidence of the spirit of true public service that is the strong foundation of the Department. Somehow and in some way the fact that from the beginning the Department has existed for the sole purpose of making life in America a better, richer, and fuller experience has resulted in an honest, vigorous, and intensely realistic public-service concept on the part of the staff of the Department, high and low, that is truly remarkable.

This makes the Department a most stimulating and inspiring place to work. A member of the Department does not have the feeling that he is just helping to turn the wheels that make a large organization work; he feels he is a partner in a great enterprise.

This institutional appreciation is a priceless asset. It could not be created by the use of money or by any of the modern methods of building a so-called esprit de corps, as important and desirable as that may be.

I would be the first one to admit or even assert that the Department is not perfect. There is no danger of this, but if it ever gets to be perfect it will become so self-centered as to be of little use as a public-service institution. For many years my work has involved extensive and varied external relationships, both public and private. I have kept my eyes and ears open. The net result is that I am more deeply convinced than ever that in the USDA we have something quite unusual, whether measured by public or private standards.

We have become so accustomed to all this that sometimes it appears that we just take it for granted. But, as everyone knows, traditions have to be kept alive and passed forward. We are not static, which I think is very good, since nothing would be more objectionable than an insulated or too highly inbred bureaucracy.

Heads of the Department, bureau heads, and the personnel at large come and go. Even bureaus come and go as the cycle of organization and reorganization keeps in motion. It is noteworthy that regardless of the scope and degree of such changes and the strain they sometimes impose, the traditions and ideals of the Department are kept alive by recognition by the officers and personnel generally of these great intangibles among our institutional assets and determination and eternal vigilance to keep it so from generation to generation.

That is why I feel compelled to mention the traditions and public-service ideals of the Department as one of the outstanding impressions I have at the close of a lifetime of sharing in this good and wholesome atmosphere.

In like spirit he wrote in his last days to Secretary Brannan:

Hon. CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
Secretary of Agriculture.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: When I last mentioned the subject of my retirement I had hoped to be able to remain on the job until after the first of the new year. During recent weeks, however, my physical condition has grown worse so rapidly that I now have no choice but to apply at once for disability retirement.

After spending nearly 42 years in the Department I regret very much the necessity for leaving in such summary fashion. I had expected to retire at 60, about 3 years hence, and always took it for granted that when that time came I would have the usual opportunity to say good-by, individually and in person, to my many friends and associates in the Department. Since that is not now possible, I should like to take this opportunity, through you as the head of the Department, to say good-by and to thank each and every one for their kindness and cooperation over the years. There are no finer folks anywhere than those who comprise the Department of Agriculture. I have the deepest personal affection for them and I am going to miss them very much indeed.

Among many other things that I should like to say at this time there is one more that I feel I must say. I would be either the most ungrateful, or the least discerning, person in the world if I left without saying it. And that is that there is no finer place in America than the Department of Agriculture in which to grow up and spend a lifetime, as I have done. I feel that I have been most fortunate in having had that privilege.

Not a week passes, even after all these years, that I am not stimulated by some new and fresh evidence of the spirit of true public service that is the strong foundation of the Department of Agriculture. Somehow, and in some way, the fact that from the beginning the Department has existed for the sole purpose of making life in America a better, richer, and fuller experience, has resulted in an honest, vigorous, and intensely realistic public-service concept on the part of the staff of the Department, high and low, that is truly remarkable. This makes the Department a most stimulating and inspiring place in which to work. A member of the Department of Agriculture does not have the feeling that he is just helping to turn the wheels that make a large organization work; he feels he is a partner in a great enterprise. That has been my experience for 42 years. I know it is the experience of countless others in the Department who could not be tempted to work anywhere else. This institutional appreciation is a priceless asset. It could not be created by the use of money or by any of the modern methods of building a so-called esprit de corps, as important and desirable as that may be.

Of course, some will say that these are merely the enthusiastic, or overenthusiastic, observations of a person who has spent his lifetime within the walls of the USDA. I admit to some vulnerability on that score and have tried all the more, therefore, to be objective about the Department. I would be the first one to admit or even assert that the Department is not perfect. There is no danger of this, but if it ever gets to be perfect it will become so self-centered as to be of little use as a public-service institution. For many years my work has involved extensive and varied external relationships, both public and private. I have kept my eyes and ears open. The net result is that I am more deeply convinced than ever that in the USDA we have something quite unusual, whether measured by public or private standards.

We have become so accustomed to all this that sometimes it appears that we just take it for granted. But, as everyone knows, traditions have to be kept alive and passed forward. We are not static, which I think is very good since nothing would be more objectionable than an insulated or too highly inbred bureaucracy. Heads of the Department, bureau heads, and the personnel at large come and go. Even bureaus come and go as the cycle of organization and reorganization keeps in motion. It is noteworthy that regardless of the scope and degree of such changes and the strain they sometimes impose the traditions and ideals of the Department at large are kept alive by recognition by the officers and personnel generally of these great intangibles among our institutional assets and determination and eternal vigilance to keep it so from generation to generation. That is why I feel impelled to mention the traditions and public-service ideals of the Department as one of the outstanding impressions I have at the close of a lifetime of sharing in this good and wholesome atmosphere.

In building such a valuable institutional tradition over the years the Department has had great help from the existence of certain characteristics or factors that have a bearing on all that it does. The relative virtue we have attained, it seems to me, has been tremendously influenced by some of these. No two people would agree on a list of such factors but some that I have seemed to see quite clearly are:

The impact of research on the character of the Department. The existence from the beginning of research and experimentation as the basic function of the Department has instilled a general respect for the eternal quest for the truth and a corresponding skepticism and scorn for sham, half-truth, conclusions not supported by facts, and so on.

The practice of maintaining the closest possible contact with the people themselves and their elected Representatives in Congress in determining what constitutes sound policy and program at any given time. This has resulted in the desirable situation where there is no such thing in fact as a Department of Agriculture program. For convenience, we refer to USDA programs, but over the years I sense that we have learned that the people's programs are the only ones that have a sound and lasting place in a democracy. Occasionally, the Department pushes forward more rapidly than some people believe justified. This is desirable evidence of dynamic and progressive leadership arising out of our public-service concept. When the shake-down occurs we know the actual programs will and must be those the people want and support.

The collaborative and cooperative process: The great connectionalism (I know about the word "nexus" but it's too simple a word to do justice to agricultural organization in the United States) in which the Department is involved with the land-grant colleges and other State agricultural departments and institutions, the farm organizations, the farmer committee systems, the cooperatives, the agricultural credit agencies, the industry and trade groups, the congressional committees, and so on, has developed a philosophy of collaboration and cooperation that has made an imprint on the Department and its methods of thought and action that is unique in Government. While fulfilling the obligations of this vast and intricate pattern of relationships is burdensome at times, the results have made the United States the envy of the world where food and agriculture are concerned. A byproduct is that the Department has been saved from becoming arrogant, self-sufficient, smug and too satisfied with itself. These are alleged to be common sins of bureaucracy. I say "alleged" because they are not nearly so prevalent as some would have the public believe and personally I don't believe they exist in Government in as great degree as in private enterprise. While some, of course, say we have these sins (and doubtless we do, in spots, for temporary periods) I believe we have largely avoided the pattern of officialdom they suggest because we are, and must be, a part of this vast agricultural connectionalism.

The democratic process in internal administration, arising, I believe, out of some of the factors mentioned above, the Department is distinctive in its practice of collaboration and cooperation in the development of policies and methods of internal administration and operation. This contributes tremendously to making the Department a wonderful place in which to work. I do not know of any place in the world where an arbitrary or unsound adminstrative policy or practice has less chance of survival than in the Department of Agriculture.

The Department also has been blessed throughout its history by high-grade leadership at the top. I have worked under 11 Secretaries of Agriculture, including the present Secretary, and every one of them has dedicated himself to the highest possible standards of public service. For years I have advanced the theory that God looks out for the Department of Agriculture in this respect. Whatever the reason, the fact remains that we have never had other than able men who understood and believed in the public-service concept as Secretaries of Agriculture. That has been a big factor in maintaining the high character of the Department, both externally and internally.

It is a source of deep regret to me that I will not have the privilege of serving with you personally in the years ahead. I have always enjoyed working with you. Particularly, I have admired your courage and vigorous and consistent championing of the principles of public welfare, fairness, and justice as applied to Government policies and programs. I wish you happiness and every success in your leadership in American agriculture as well as in the Department internally and I have no doubt you are going to continue to have an interesting and satisfying experience.

I appreciate all of the consideration which has been shown to me and will always be tremendously interested in what you and the Department of Agriculture are doing.

With warm personal regards,

Sincerely,

W. A. JUMP,
Director of Finance.

Perhaps the best summation of Mr. Jump's long and distinguished public career was written by President Truman when, on learning of his resignation as Director of the Department's Office of Budget and Finance, he wrote:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 21, 1948.

MY DEAR MR. JUMP: I have received with a sense of deep loss the word that you are retiring from the Government service. Few public servants have earned a rest as much as you have, and I send you every good wish as you relinquish your duties as Director of Finance and budget officer of the Department of Agriculture. In addition to my personal relationship with you, for which I shall always be grateful, I know that I speak for hundreds of others when I say that your retirement will create a void which will be hard to fill.

However, you have become a symbol of such a high standard of public service that we cannot think of your retirement as ending your career. Your example of selfless effort to improve public administration has blazed a wide and clear trail which is already being followed by many of your associates and will be followed by many others for a long time.

You carry with you the good wishes of your coworkers. It is a privilege and a pleasure to extend to you the thanks of the Government which you have served through more than four decades with such self-sacrificing devotion and fidelity.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRIS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. MCDONOUGH asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and in both to include extraneous matter.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow following the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered for the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT BUREAUS AND DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments this morning began hearings on H. R. 1569, a bill to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies and for other purposes.

The bill is somewhat similar to previous legislation, but, as in previous legislation, it carries a provision in section 6 of title I which makes it subject to the objection that it is unconstitutional.

Permit me to state that I agree with the overwhelming majority of the Congress that there should be a reorganization of the executive departments which will give greater efficiency at less cost.

Nothing is sought to be accomplished by this bill which cannot be accomplished through legislative procedure.

The argument that no previous Congress has attempted a general reorganization of the executive departments is not an answer to the fact that this Congress has authority to do that job if it so desires.

We have a Democratic President and we have a Democratic majority in the Senate and in the House. Presumably, that Democratic majority in each House is working with the President. Nor is there any reason to believe that the Republican membership in both Senate and House will not go along with the President on any reasonable, valid plan which promises greater efficiency and economy.

There is at this time no excuse for evading or ignoring constitutional provisions.

Say what you will, our procedure and progress under the Constitution have demonstrated that it is still the form of government which gives to the citizen the greatest freedom and prosperity, to the Nation the greatest degree of security. Having the best, why should we scrap it or disregard its essential provisions?

To attain a desired objective, should we disregard fundamental principles and procedure incorporated in the instrument which has protected the liberty of the citizen, guaranteed the safety of our Nation? The answer is obvious.

Unfortunately, this bill (H. R. 1569) as written, seeks to reverse the constitutional legislative processes.

Section 1 of article I of the Constitution provides that—

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The second paragraph of section 7 provides that—

> Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall before it becomes a law be presented to the President of the United States.

Now it is true that section 3 of article II provides that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

But nowhere in the Constitution nor in the amendments to it, so far as I have been able to find, is there a sentence or a word which authorizes the President of the United States and one branch of the Congress to enact legislation.

H. R. 1569, construed as a whole, authorizes the President to send down reorganization plans, and it expressly states that, unless within 60 legislative days, both the Senate and the House disapprove of those plans as written, they shall be the law of the land.

This reorganization bill ignores the constitutional provisions that the legislative power shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which, according to the Constitution, "shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

Under the Constitution, as every Member of this House and every schoolboy knows, before a bill or a resolution can become the law of the land it must receive the approval of a majority of the Members of the Senate and the House. Then, if the President vetoes the bill or resolution, it must before it becomes law, receive the approval of two-thirds of the Members of each House.

Under the reorganization bill as written and as now being considered by the committee, the procedure would be changed, and a bill or resolution or plan, whatever you prefer to call it, submitted by the President would, if it was approved by either the House or the Senate and disapproved by the other, nevertheless become the law of the land.

Stated in another way, the proposed reorganization plan would give to the President and to one branch of Congress the authority to enact legislation having to do with the reorganization of the executive department.

Or if the President sent down a bill and neither House acted adversely within 60 legislative days, the President's plan would become the law of the land. To state that somewhat differently, the President, under this bill, can "introduce" a bill and that bill becomes a law without the action of either House.

Under the Constitution, although a majority of the Senate and the House pass a bill, the President has the authority to veto it. Unless that veto is disapproved by two-thirds of each House, the bill or resolution does not become a law.

Under the reorganization plan, a bill or resolution or plan proposed by the President becomes the law of the land unless it is vetoed within 60 legislative days by both branches of the Congress.

Such a departure from constitutional provisions is so apparent, so radical, that I cannot support it.

Believing as I do in the purpose of the bill, I shall, in committee, and if unsuccessful there, later on the floor, if the rules permit, offer an amendment striking out section 6 and providing in a general way that when any such plan is suggested by the President, it shall, by the proper officer of either body, be referred to the proper committee for action in the customary manner.

Such an amendment will also require the Congress to act upon the plan so submitted within a fixed period of time.

One or two other amendments will be offered to the bill at the proper time, but none will be so drafted as to in any way interfere with a speedy and complete reorganization of executive departments in the manner indicated by the President if the Congress so desires.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. It is true that there is legislative precedent for this, is there not? Even prior to the war we passed legislation which did just that?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. There may be legislative precedent, but what has that to do with the legality of the procedure? The gentleman does not claim we are bound by the actions of a previous Congress, does he? There are many bad precedents. The United States Supreme Court has recently overruled some of its own decisions. I recall the precedent established by the United States Supreme Court back in March of 1942 when it decided under the law that then existed certain organizations had the right, in the words of Chief Justice Stone, to practice highway robbery. But we fixed that. The fact that some other Congress, a rubber-stamp Congress, if you please, has dodged its duty, shirked its responsibility, or made a mistake is no reason why the objections which I raise, if they are valid, should not now be acted upon favorably. May I ask the gentleman, the fact there is legislative precedent for it would not standing alone justify us in passing this bill, would it?

Mr. GRANGER. In answer to that I would say "No," but I did want the gentleman to know this is not an absolutely new thing. It has been done before.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is right. I would say it has been done two or three times, but that does not make it right. That is no reason why we should now shirk our responsibility, dodge our responsibility, if you want to put it that way, and turn over this power to the President and to one House of Congress, or more accurately, if both Houses fail to act, to the President.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Is it not a fact that the courts have not ruled on the legality of this proposed legislation?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Not so far as I know. Of course, that may be due to the fact no one has brought it up. It has not been tested. But the Constitution is so clear, the provisions as to how legislation shall be enacted are so plain, that I cannot see how there can be any difference of opinion as to what the Constitution provides. If there is no difference of opinion as to that, why should we attempt in this way to circumvent, dodge, or repeal the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GOLDEN. From the gentleman's study of this bill, does he think it will really accomplish great economy for the people of the United States?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I cannot tell about that. We had the unification bill up for consideration. We were told in the beginning that it would bring about economy through unification of the armed services, but before the hearings were over the witnesses did not know whether there would be economy or not. We all know that there is plenty of room for economy. We should have it. We hope this bill will bring that about.

Certainly, I would say that if former President Hoover and the Commission which has given so much study cannot devise a plan to give us greater efficiency and economy, I do not know of any commission that can.

Mr. GOLDEN. That was my hope, that we would accomplish a great, needed economy for our people that are already overburdened.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with that. I am in agreement that we should take this plan in the main, but I would like to change that particular provision as to when it shall become a law and how it shall become a law. One other thing in the bill: There is no limitation in the bill as to the time in which the President must submit his reorganization plan. I think there should be. I do not care whether you make it 60 days or 90 days after the convening of Congress, but there should be a limit. For this reason, that if the Congress must act—that is, both Houses of Congress—within 60 legislative days from the time the bill is submitted, and if the President should wait until 61 days before adjournment date—and adjournment is fixed by the Reorganization Act—then, as we all know, there is a flood of bills before the Congress, a great deal of business before the Congress, and we would not be able, no matter how much we desired, to give that reorganization plan the consideration that it ought to have.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the Commission does not recommend a Cabinet position for the Veterans' Administration? It leaves it as an independent office. I have always felt that anything so important as the Veterans' Administration should be a department, with the head of it having Cabinet rank. The head of the Veterans' Administration has a great responsibility.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I understand the gentlewoman's consideration for the veterans. I do not believe there is an hour of any day that she is not thinking of the veterans. But, I do not see why we should establish a separate department.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think that it makes for efficiency, as well as a benefit to the veterans. The Veterans' Administration has the welfare of some 18,000,000 persons under its jurisdiction with an increasing load. It has, also, a very far-reaching effect on the economy of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STAGGERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by his colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Columbia Basin Commission.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include newspaper comments.

Mr. FELLOWS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. NORBLAD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

FEDERAL AID TO SCHOOLS

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to state to my colleagues in the House of Representatives that early in the present session I introduced for your consideration a bill providing for Federal aid to our elementary and secondary schools.

Under the Federal Constitution of the United States, this Government has the right to appropriate Federal funds to improve the general welfare of our people. Conditions have arisen in the United States over the past few years that make it imperatively necessary for our Central Government to aid our various State governments in financing the schools of this great free country. There is, in my opinion, no bill pending before the Congress of the United States, of a domestic nature, of more vital importance to our people than this bill. Since the inception of our country, one of the greatest privileges of America has been the opportunities given to our school children for a free education.

With a very large number of the States of this Union having already reached the ceiling and limit of their ability to tax their people and raise funds for school purposes locally, we are confronted with a national emergency that, in my sincere opinion, requires the Federal Government to supplement the State funds to prevent our educational system from deteriorating to such an extent that it would permanently injure the welfare of our people for several decades to come.

Under our republican form of government, where the people themselves have the free right to vote for measures and men in order that our people may maintain their liberty and the blessings of this country, we must have an educated electorate, and we must keep and maintain high educational standards so that communism and other destructive ideologies cannot and will not take root in America to destroy us.

Furthermore, if we educate our youth they will not only be better able to maintain themselves, and to contribute greatly to our national income by their increased capacity to produce, but will also be able to remove themselves from the classes of people who are often dependent and who call upon our National Government for various kinds of support, and will thereby again greatly strengthen the entire people of America, and contribute directly to our national welfare.

In this dawn of the atomic age, or better stated, the dawn of scientific age, if we do not improve our educational standards in America, the doors of opportunity will be slammed in the faces of millions of our boys and girls. America has definitely assumed world leadership, and never before in the history of our country has it been so vitally important for us to educate our youth.

It is apparent to all thoughtful men and women who believe in the freedom and dignity of the individual and believe devoutly in Christianity—that the entire peoples of the world are now in a mortal struggle where the forces of evil, slavery, communism, and dictatorship are arrayed against the American way of life. This terrible struggle will go on for years.

We are in a righteous crusade, endeavoring to hold aloft the torch of Christianity and freedom in order that mankind everywhere may have the blessings of freedom. We cannot maintain this great leadership, neither can we win this great struggle, unless we continue to educate the boys and girls of America. We must greatly increase their educational opportunities. I think we have a tremendous obligation to provide equality of opportunity to the children of the United States. No child can have equality of opportunity, in my opinion, unless to start with he has a basic minimum education. There are many children who may have the mental capacity or the mental brilliance to rise above the handicap, and there are many who will likely educate themselves, but I think they comprise a very small proportion of the total. The ordinary child who receives no education is, in effect, condemned to a life of poverty, a life on the basis of a low standard of living, a life of little interest, and a life which is of little value to the people of the United States.

During World War II over 1,200,000 men, representing 8 percent of all those examined for selective service, were rejected because of deficiencies. I am advised that a very large percentage of this great army of rejected young men came from States that were unable to properly educate their youth. This threw an additional burden upon the few States who had maintained higher educational standards for their children.

The Federal census of 1940 disclosed that 10,000,000 adult Americans had less than 5 years of schooling. The census of 1945 disclosed that 4,000,000 children between the ages of 5 to 17, inclusive, and 2,000,000 children in the usual school brackets of 6 to 17, inclusive, did not attend any school. In proportion to population, the largest number of adults and children of school age in these groups reside in low-income States.

This is a Nation-wide problem. We should not look at it from a local or State viewpoint. We should have as nearly as possible in America an equalization of educational opportunities for all of the youth of this great country. This necessary equalization cannot be had unless we obtain Federal aid to supplement State funds for schools.

Over the past recent years, with the purchasing power of the dollar greatly descending, tens of thousands of our school teachers and educators have worked in their vital profession for salaries and compensation far below the requirements of a decent living, and our teachers have for years made personal sacrifices to continue in their chosen profession—at great personal loss to themselves. In addition to this, many of our great educators and splendid school teachers have been forced to retire from the field of education and seek employment in other lines that pay a great deal more. As a consequence of these trends our schools are in a deplorable condition. Thousands of young teachers, with inadequate training, and with only emergency and temporary certificates, have been required to assume the great responsibility of training and teaching our children. However, great credit must be given to emergency teachers who have kept open schools that might otherwise have closed, but their unselfish service does not excuse the failure to pay salaries that will hold qualified teachers, and give incentive to emergency teachers to qualify themselves, and advance the standards of teaching.

There is something wrong with an economic and social system which makes better provision for men and women in labor, industry, or other professions, than for those who have made great sacrifice in time and money to prepare themselves to teach the youth of the Nation. There is no prospect of this deplorable situation getting any better without Federal Aid, and without such aid it will rapidly get much worse.

During the year 1943, more than 1,000,000 new Americans were born in the United States. In the year 1947, 1,300,000 American children were born in the United States. This is far more than usual. The children born 5 and 6 years ago are now entering school, trying to get in schools that are already understaffed with teachers and overcrowded with pupils.

Any American boy or girl, if given a preliminary education in this great free country of ours will have unlimited opportunities spread before them throughout life. If they have no education, they will likely be a constant expense and drain on the rest of our people.

If we tackle this problem now and keep our educational standards high, and greatly improve them, we will not only see many of our young American men and women rise to eminence and statesmanship, and fill the great offices of our country, but there will be tens of thousands of essential places in our society that educated young men and women can and will fill. We must remember that besides the exceptionally few brilliant successes that come from our schools, the ordinary men and women of tomorrow march out from the school doors of our beloved land unprepared and not ready to meet and master the complexities of our modern civilization.

There should be no State boundary lines considered while this bill is pending before the House of Representatives, and there certainly is no political issue involved. It simply presents a great emergency that demands the thoughtful and early consideration of every Member of Congress in order that we may keep this great country free and secure.

It will take two-thirds of all the women graduates from all our colleges and universities going into the field of education to supply new and qualified teachers in order to meet the bare needs that now exist. It takes money and a lot of it in order to furnish only a reasonable staff of American teachers. We must have a million teachers in order to enable our boys and girls to receive the education and training they are entitled to.

While this Government has been generous and helpful to many of the peoples of the world, it is my belief that we should now first give consideration to our own people, our boys and girls, and the $300,000,000 per annum provided for in my bill is a small sum indeed as compared to other appropriations that have been and will likely be made to aid millions of people in other countries.

My bill is H. R. 1144. I think it embraces all the good features necessary to enable our children to receive a higher standard of education. In 1944 there were approximately 29,000,000 school children ranging in age from 5 to 17 in in the United States. This number is increasing rapidly. There are approximately 867,248 elementary and secondary teachers. This bill will directly benefit both these large groups of our people. Last week the United States loaned $100,000,000 to the Government of Israel. Why not use some of our national fund for our own people who deserve and need it most? To do so will strengthen this great Nation of ours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN.) Under previous order of the House the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 15 minutes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, since this Congress is committed to enlarge the scope of old-age security, and aid to crippled and the blind, it will not be out of place to state to this Congress just how the matter operates today under our present law. Under the present law the Federal Government pays a maximum of $45 per month for each person certified on the relief rolls. On the first $15 the Federal Government pays two-thirds and then one-half of the remaining allowance up to the maximum of $45. Specifically, it would work out as follows:

|---|---|
| First $15: | |
| Government's share | $10 |
| State's share | 5 |
| Next $30: | |
| Government's share | 15 |
| State's share | 15 |

In other words, on a $45 basis the Government would pay $25 and the States, $20.

It is unnecessary to point out to this House the inadequacy of this $45 in times where the cost of living, the cost of clothing, the cost of everything a poor man has to buy has pyramided to new heights. Congress must realize this, for it was not long ago that the Congress increased the salaries of Congressmen to $12,500 and added an extra untaxable expense account of $2,500.

Just think this over. What could you do in times like these if all you had to spend was $45 per month? That is not the worst of the situation. Under North Dakota law the welfare boards are authorized and do file liens against any property old people own, and of course, this is a superior lien to anything but taxes and a first mortgage. When the old person dies up comes this lien and if the property is worth the amount of the money advanced, the property is sold for that purpose unless the heirs decide to redeem the property and pay the money back which the aged received for old-age assistance. There have been instances where jewelry or silverware, long in the family, have had to be disposed of.

In other words, as this law operates, we make the aged of the country abject paupers before they can draw a dime from the welfare boards. Is that what is called an old-age pension? The aged should draw the annual payments as a matter of right and retain their self-respect. We do not do it that way. We help an aged person only when he is down and completely out, and if he still clings to a little property that sustains his self-respect, we take that away. The first thing we do is to make sure that he is a pauper and an alms beggar. If he is not down and out, we make him so.

In the State of North Dakota the sales tax is divided and set aside for two purposes: One is to support the schools of the State and the other to take care of the aged, blind, and crippled. Three-fifths of this tax goes to schools and two-fifths to the other purposes. North Dakota is now collecting about $11,500,000 in sales taxes and is able to match Federal funds without changing the ratio of the division of the tax, and without any extra appropriation from the legislature.

If this Congress would change the present formula to match funds on a basis of $90 per month, there is no question but what North Dakota could match Government funds.

The Social Security Act should be amended with a provision that funds shall be paid to recipients as a matter of right and not as an alms gift; that any property owned by an applicant shall not be subject to a lien as a condition precedent to participation in the social-security fund. No State welfare set-up should be approved that has this abject-pauper clause in it.

This Congress wants also to remember that before the Townsend movement swept the country we were doing nothing for the aged. That scheme was labeled fantastic and visionary, and Dr. Townsend was described as a bad character. We even put him in jail here in Washington because he was outspoken in his demand for old-age assistance. That movement, nevertheless, no matter how roundly criticized, was the mother of the present Social Security Act. It was a start, but, as little as it was, credit for the start must be given to those thousands who put in their dimes and nickels to support a great humanitarian movement.

This agitation will go on—no one can stop it—until the aged in the United States have adequate old-age assistance that is honorable and which comes to them as a matter of right.

The majority of this Congress and the President himself are bound by their campaign pledges to come to the relief of the aged men and women of the United States. I am bound by that pledge; and, as a Republican Member of this Congress, I will make available to the aged of the United States my time and whatever ability I have, to bring a little more sunshine into their lives—the lives of our pioneers.

Not all of our citizens over the age of 65 years ever make an application for old-age assistance. In the United States today there are approximately 11,000,000 who have reached the age of 65 years. As the social-security administration has functioned, only 2,482,350 have filed applications for assistance.

In North Dakota in 1948 there were 46,114 persons who had reached the age of 65 years, but the number asking for assistance was approximately 8,713, or about 13.9 percent of the total number of aged persons.

If the Federal yardstick or limit of assistance was raised to $90 per month instead of $45, the Government would pay approximately $4,860,000 annually and the State of North Dakota a like amount. Can the State of North Dakota match this fund? The answer is "Yes." The sales tax brings in $11,000,000 annually and two-fifths of this or $5,000,000 is earmarked for the aged, blind, and crippled.

For the aged in the entire United States who apply for old-age assistance to get $90 per month would require a fund of approximately $990,000,000, of which the Federal Government would pay one-half, or $495,000,000. The various States would pay a like amount.

This seems like a huge sum, but let us stop for a moment and see what a billion means to Congress.

World War I cost us with outstanding commitments, $80,000,000,000, and World War II, $450,000,000,000, and since the shooting stopped we have extended aid to foreign countries in the approximate sum of $63,000,000,000. We dumped three billion into China and bet on the wrong horse, and our aid to Greece and Czechoslovakia will probably end in total losses. I will present in the RECORD, as soon as I get the information from the Treasury Department, a full statement of loans to foreign countries, or gifts, as these loans in the most part will be gifts when payment time comes. England owed thirty-four billion and we canceled that in full if they would pay the interest. They did not have the interest so we loaned them enough more to pay the interest. Does anyone think we will collect this? Why not be plain about it and say that we canceled the thirty-four billion of England's indebtedness to us completely.

There are a great many people in the United States fearful that communism will gain a foothold here, hence we are out to stop its spread before its gets to this country. That is the whole sentiment behind the Marshall plan. We are not making much headway in this matter as in country after country we have spent our money in vain.

Did anyone in the State Department understand that to loan money and send materials to the Chiang Kai-shek Government of China would stop the Communists? Chiang is probably the richest potentate on the face of the globe and has presided over more starving millions than anyone in history.

Let us determine in what kind of soil communism grows. Does it grow and spread anywhere in the world where there is no hunger, distress, and suffering? No, it requires the soil of starvation and want. As long as we here in the United States or in the governments of any country keep this burden off the backs of the people, there will be no communism. If we preserve and enforce the guaranties of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights, there will be no flocking of the people to communism.

We have neglected our own people while we have been attempting to bring the four freedoms to all corners of the earth. Are we not now neglecting the aged of this country? Can we expect them to live on a $45 per month allowance in times of pyramided prices? They are suffering now—we are keeping them in distress. And, by the way, are we protecting our own people when we have half-starved and half-naked Indians tramping through the snow to hunt something to eat?

I do not say that we should not help starving people in other countries, but we should not pour out the billions for that purpose without a whimper while our own people are in want. Let us keep the United States sound and committed always to a people's government, where all the people shall have the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We should never allow conditions to develop here where want, suffering, and distress overtake the people. We should be too proud as a Nation—a Nation that has the opportunity to give hope to distressed people everywhere—to permit our aged people and our citizen Indians to beg for something to eat. Let us as Congressmen resolve right now that hungry Indians shall be fed and that the old pioneers of America shall not have to stand in a beggars' line.

In their last days, let the aged of America know that a great Government, one which they helped to build by their years of toil, is the kind of a government that does not forget them.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I am very glad the gentleman has so early in this session brought this question before the House. I sincerely hope that many of us in the House will follow him and try to do something about this problem.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

LET US GET THE FORESTRY JOB DONE

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, just a year ago on December 11, 1947, in the Eightieth Congress, I made a speech entitled "Starting the Forestry Job Now." I quoted from a magazine article which stated that other countries were developing their forest resources on a huge scale. I urged as strongly as I knew how that we in this great Nation get started on an adequate program for the restoration and development of our own forest resources.

In the same Eightieth Congress, I and several of my distinguished colleagues, including Senator Russell, Senator Ellender, Congressmen Pickett of Texas, Allen of Louisiana, and Riley of South Carolina, introduced bills which would have given our Nation some of the stimulus needed to produce timber for war or peace, for soil and game conservation, and for flood-control problems.

Furthermore, in the Eightieth Congress some 124 Congressmen, a number of representative small-woodland owners, and many other interested persons appeared before congressional committees and pleaded for an adequate start now in building up our forest resources. Yet all of you know that but little resulted from the efforts for forestry in the Eightieth Congress.

In 1947 the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, headed by our distinguished former colleague, Representative Everett Dirksen, of Illinois, stated in its report:

> Farm and other private forestry cooperation. * * * This is another item which stands high in the esteem of the committee. It is carrying the work direct to the farm and is resulting in additional dollars in the farmer's pocket as well as improvement in the conservation of the soils of the farms.

Here is a great Republican leader speaking when the Republicans were in the majority and speaking in favor of a forestry item. But look at the record and you will find that nothing in the way of an expanded-action program was started. These wise words are just as significant today because forest-resource development—and, gentlemen, this is most important—forest-resource development is and must be a nonpartisan opportunity. And it is in this same nonpartisan spirit that I address you today.

The title I used last year—"Starting the Forestry Job Now"—is still appropriate and I use it again. This time, however, I shall emphasize two forestry items of outstanding importance—fire protection and tree planting.

As I said before, each year we delay makes the reconstruction of our forests more difficult and more costly. Another year has slipped past. During that year we suffered losses of tree growth through forest fires on 20,000,000 acres. The area needing planting was increased by probably several hundred thousand acres. The two items to which I give particular attention today—fire protection and planting—are both basic forestry measures. We must protect what we plant and we must plant areas where we have failed in our protection job.

I will not take your time in pointing out the absolute necessity of protecting and conserving our forest resources. I take it for granted that you appreciate how essential an adequate forest resource is to our peacetime economy and how vital it is in times of national emergencies. A few days ago President Truman, in his message on the state of the Union, stressed the need for putting all our forest lands on a sustained-yield basis.

Obviously adequate protection from fire is the first essential step in that direction.

The forest-fire-protection problem in this country centers mainly on privately owned forest lands. By and large, these privately owned lands are the more accessible and productive three-quarters of our total forest-land resource. The great bulk of our lumber and other wood products now and in the future must come from these areas. Largely as a result of Federal aid extended under the Clarke-McNary Act, we now have organized fire protection on 328,000,000 acres of these lands. But 111,000,000 acres—an area nearly four times as large as the State of Pennsylvania—is as yet without any form of organized forest-fire control. Most of these unprotected areas are in the Southeastern States; but, wherever they may be, it is on these unprotected forest lands that the greatest damages from uncontrolled fire occur.

As a Member of the Congress I must look at this problem from the standpoint of our entire country. But protection from forest fires does strike very close home with me. In my own State of Florida we have 21,500,000 acres of forest lands, two-thirds of which are urgently in need of organized forest-fire control but do not get it now mainly because of lack of funds. I hope I appreciate the need for economizing in public expenditures whenever and wherever it is prudent to do so, but I feel very strongly that to prevent, as far as possible, the needless destruction of essential natural resources is a sound public investment. I believe that failure to do so is false economy.

This Congress should increase the present authorization of section 3 of the Clarke-McNary Act in order that the Federal Government may meet its obligation to the States and complete the cooperative forest-fire-control program contemplated by that act. The present authorization of $9,000,000 is based on the low prewar costs of 1937. I am informed that to do a minimum country-wide fire-control job will now cost at least $40,000,000 a year. On a matching basis the Federal share would be $20,000,000 as compared to the current limitation of less than half that amount. The States and cooperating private landowners already are spending about $16,000,000 a year. They feel that the National Government is lagging behind in carrying its share of the load.

Now I want to talk briefly on tree planting. As I stated last year there are something like 75,000,000 acres of forest land so heavily cut, burned, or otherwise stripped of productive cover that they must be artificially replanted. At the rate we are doing this job now it would take several hundred years to replant this enormous acreage even if no additional lands are denuded. We cannot afford to wait so long.

Most of this land is privately owned. What can the Federal Government do to encourage tree planting on privately owned forest land? One of the easiest and most effective steps which can be taken is to provide low-cost planting stock to small landowners. This can be done very easily and very quickly simply by expanding the Federal-State forest tree nurseries now operating on a small scale under the authority of the Clarke-McNary and Norris-Doxey Acts.

During the war some of these nurseries were abandoned or plowed up and planted to food crops. As a result, in 1947 they produced only 42,000,000 trees. Since then, the States have been struggling to increase production but the supply of trees is still far short of the demand. For example, farm plans made by soil-conservation districts alone call for 490,000,000 trees more than are now available.

I emphasize again, because I cannot repeat too often, the tremendous size of this job and its vital importance to our Nation's peacetime welfare and wartime security. You will be shocked to learn, as I was shocked to learn, that the total Federal expenditures for this vital cooperative program amount to only $124,600 a year. The States spend in addition somewhat more than this but it should be clearly evident that separately or together the effort is ridiculously inadequate.

Let us not discourage ourselves or others with the fallacious belief that trees planted now will take so long to produce useful crops that they will not bear dividends in our lifetimes. We have many examples in my State and elsewhere which prove that the benefits of tree planting begin to show up in a relatively short period of time. Let me tell you a little story to illustrate this point.

When she was 56 years old in 1930, Mrs. A. M. E. Brown, of Columbia County, Fla., planted her first pine trees. The county agent suggested she try a tree crop and the forester from the State forester's office recommended slash pine, native to her farm. The pine seedlings were planted on a 42-acre field which had failed repeatedly when planted to the usual crops of cotton and corn. When the trees were 14 years old Mrs. Brown, then at the age of 70, had one-third of them cut for pulpwood. Receipts from the sale of pulpwood gave her a return of $900 over and above all costs. This forest is now ready for a second thinning and there will be even greater yields in years to come.

I think the significant part of this story is that although 56 years old Mrs. Brown had faith in the future. The 14 years required on her land to produce a tree crop was not discouraging to her. Fourteen years or 20 years or 40 years are all brief periods in the life of a nation. But a beginning must be made. If we want to get, within a reasonable time, the benefits of planted forests or of natural growth in the form of jobs, timber, flood control, soil and game conservation, windbreaks, and recreational opportunities we must start now.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 16 minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 25, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

90. A letter from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting a copy of a proposed draft of legislation to authorize the disposition of certain lost, abandoned, or unclaimed personal property coming into the possession of the Treasury Department, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Air Force, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

91. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a copy of the notice of the withdrawal of his request for compliance from the Secretary of Commerce to the Maridon Manufacturing Co., Inc., of New York, under the voluntary plan for the allocation of steel products for warm-air heating equipment for residential housing; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

92. A letter from the Under Secretary of State transmitting certificates of final ascertainment of the electors of President and Vice President of the United States chosen in the respective States on November 2, 1948, copies of certificates from the States of Florida, New York, and Wisconsin received subsequently to formal transmittal dates of December 30, 1948 and January 6, 1949; to the Committee on House Administration.

93. A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a copy of the following final valuation of properties of this carrier subject to the act: Valuation Docket No. 1283—Shell Oil Co., Inc., Products Pipe Line Department; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

94. A letter from the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, transmitting a report under the date of November 8, 1948, that as of September 30, 1948, relief had been granted to one claimant, Clinton E. Smith and Douglas Corgey, doing business as the Corpus Christi Shipbuilding Corp., at Corpus Christi, Tex.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

95. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to stowaways; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

96. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to fees of witnesses and travel allowance of witnesses attending in United States courts or before United States commissioners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

97. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to perjury; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

98. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to mental-disease cases in the nearby Maryland and Virginia districts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

99. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to the transportation of obscene literature in interstate or foreign commerce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

100. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to naturalization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

101. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill relating to the relief of certain consultants formerly employed by the Foreign Economic Administration; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

102. A letter from the Under Secretary of State, transmitting the first annual report of claims paid by the Department under the Tort Claims Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

103. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 21, 1947, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a review of reports on Charlevoix Harbor, Mich., with a view to constructing a breakwater, requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on May 10, 1945; to the Committee on Public Works.

104. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated July 22, 1947, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Shelldrake Harbor, Mich., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved on March 2, 1945; to the Committee on Public Works.

105. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated September 5, 1947, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Salem River, Salem County, N. J., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved on March 2, 1945; to the Committee on Public Works.

106. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

107. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize certain personnel and former personnel of the Naval Establishment to accept certain gifts and a foreign decoration tendered by foreign governments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

108. A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting the sixty-second annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Congress; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN:

H. R. 1703. A bill to regulate oleomargarine, to repeal certain taxes relating to oleomargarine, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BATTLE:

H. R. 1704. A bill to increase the compensation of new employees in the field service of the Post Office Department, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. BENNETT of Florida:

H. R. 1705. A bill granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CELLER:

H. R. 1706. A bill to increase the salaries of judges of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COLE of New York:

H. R. 1707. A bill to provide for the promotion of moral, temperance, and character education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education; and to provide for cooperation with the States in preparation of teachers of moral, temperance, character, and good-citizenship subjects; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. COUDERT:

H. R. 1708. A bill to provide financial assistance to urban communities of the United States for the acquisition, assembly, revaluation, financing, and disposal of areas for urban redevelopment, and as a part of such redevelopment for the construction by local agencies in such areas, or elsewhere, of low-rent public-housing projects for families of low income; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CROSSER:

H. R. 1709. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, so as to provide limitations on the time within which actions may be brought for the recovery of undercharges and overcharges by or against common carriers by motor vehicle, common carriers by water, and freight forwarders; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H. R. 1710. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H. R. 1711. A bill to provide for the dissemination of technological, scientific, and engineering information to American business and industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CURTIS:

H. R. 1712. A bill to amend section 2402 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, and to repeal section 2402 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 1713. A bill to provide for the deduction from gross income for income-tax purposes of expenses incurred by farmers for the purpose of soil and water conservation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DENTON:

H. R. 1714. A bill making the 14th day of August in each year a legal holiday, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 1715. A bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. GOODWIN:

H. R. 1716. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to permit an adopted child of a deceased individual to receive benefits thereunder without regard to the period during which he shall have occupied such status; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

H. R. 1717. A bill to release reversionary rights of the United States to certain property in Stockton, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. LARCADE:

H. R. 1718. A bill for the purpose of erecting in Lake Arthur, La., a post office building; to the Committee on Public Works.

H. R. 1719. A bill granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MANSFIELD:

H. R. 1720. A bill to provide for the conveyance of certain land in Missoula County, Mont., to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of Montana State University; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MERROW:

H. R. 1721. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize the payment of prior construction costs of certain hospitals approved as projects under such act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MILLER of California:

H. R. 1722. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired prior to April 1, 1948; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

H. R. 1723. A bill to repeal the tax on oleomargarine, to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act so as to complete the requirements for the positive identification of yellow oleomargarine, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MULTER:

H. R. 1724. A bill to terminate certain wartime and other excise-tax rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. NORRELL:

H. R. 1725. A bill to amend the act of July 24, 1946, with respect to the multiple purpose plan of improvement for the Arkansas River and tributaries, Arkansas and Oklahoma; to the Committee on Public Works.

H. R. 1726. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the city of Hot Springs National Park, Ark., a perpetual easement for the construction and operation of a water-main pipe line; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JOSEPH L. PFEIFER:

H. R. 1727. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research and investigation with respect to the cause, prevention, and treatment of multiple sclerosis, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

H. R. 1728. A bill to admit to the United States as nonquota immigrants certain displaced Polish citizens who have rendered service to the United States Army; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PRIEST:

H. R. 1729. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research and investigation with respect to the cause, prevention, and treatment of cerebral palsy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts:

H. R. 1730. A bill to require motor vehicles to be provided with suitable illuminated license plates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SPENCE:

H. R. 1731. A bill to extend certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H. R. 1732. A bill to amend the National Housing Act and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TALLE:

H. R. 1733. A bill relating to overpayments of the surtax on undistributed profits imposed by the Revenue Act of 1936; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 1734. A bill to terminate the war-tax rates on certain miscellaneous excise taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. R. 1735. A bill to repeal the retailers' excise tax on luggage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YATES:

H. R. 1736. A bill to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States by establishing a publicly supported labor extension program for wage and salary earners, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana:

H. R. 1737. A bill to amend the income limitation governing the granting of pension to veterans and death-pension benefits to widows and children of veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. ANDERSON of California:

H. R. 1738. A bill to authorize the American River Basin development, California, for irrigation and reclamation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BENNETT of Florida:

H. R. 1739. A bill to establish the Government Service University; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BENNETT of Michigan:

H. R. 1740. A bill to raise the minimum-wage standards of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BROOKS:

H. R. 1741. A bill to authorize the establishment of a joint long-range proving ground for guided missiles, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. BYRNE of New York:

H. R. 1742. A bill to provide for one national cemetery in every State and Territory and such other national cemeteries in the States, Territories, and possessions as may be needed for the burial of members of the armed forces of the United States dying in the service or former members whose last discharge therefrom was honorable, and certain other persons as provided for in title 24, section 281, United States Code, as amended; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. COLE of Kansas:

H. R. 1743. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

H. R. 1744. A bill to reimburse certain employees of the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAWSON:

H. R. 1745. A bill for the more economical operation of the general supply fund of the Bureau of Federal Supply, Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. DINGELL:

H. R. 1746. A bill to provide that the United States shall aid the States in fish restoration and management projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DOLLINGER:

H. R. 1747. A bill to repeal the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, and to revive the National Labor Relations Act (the Wagner Act); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. DURHAM:

H. R. 1748. A bill to amend section 19 of the act of August 13, 1946 (60 Stat. 1057), so as to remove the upper age limit for appointment to commissioned grade in the Supply Corps of the Navy; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. FELLOWS:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Harold W. Peterson, of Melvin, Ill., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, creator of all men, we meet today as free men in a world besieged by numberless fears and overtaken by hesitancy that is born of perplexity.

In the knowledge of the fact of our freedom, we thank Thee for the unlimited power man has succeeded in exerting for good when he has worked for Thee as in Thy sight.

Bless us with wisdom, courage, and a lively sense of conscience as we freely labor, that we may find blessing for ourselves and all mankind.

We pray for Thy presence in this place and for Thy continued guidance of our people, that peace may come through our efforts, and that a spirit of good will may be the heritage we leave for those who shall follow us. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY IN CONNECTION WITH CHINA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, over this week end we have learned the extent of the disaster that has befallen China and the United States. The responsibility for the failure of our foreign policy in the Far East rests squarely with the White House and the Department of State.

The continued insistence that aid would not be forthcoming, unless a coalition government with the Communists was formed, was a crippling blow to the National Government.

So concerned were our diplomats and their advisers, the Lattimores and the Fairbanks, with the imperfection of the democratic system in China after 20 years of war and the tales of corruption in high places that they lost sight of our tremendous stake in a non-Communist China.

Our policy, in the words of the Premier of the National Government, Sun Fo, of vacillation, uncertainty, and confusion has reaped the whirlwind.

This House must now assume the responsibility of preventing the onrushing tide of communism from engulfing all of Asia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include an interesting item appearing in a Lynn paper; secondly, an address by a very reverend clergyman; and, third, an editorial appearing in the Washington Evening Star.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and include certain statements and excerpts.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, after the regular order of business, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

HIGHER EDUCATION FOR HIGH-SCHOOL STUDENTS

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Members of the Congress to legislation I am preparing in connection with a plan that I am outlining in detail in extending my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

It should be of interest to any Members who are concerned with enabling qualified high-school students to complete a higher education when they are financially unable to do so. I do not want to take the time of the Members today to outline the plan in detail, but I do wish to call attention to it so that those who are interested may read about it in the Appendix tomorrow.

The plan is intended to enable approximately 5,000 high-school students a year to have a complete 4-year college course; and approximately 500 college students a year a complete 4-year postgraduate course at no actual cost to the Federal Government. It is open only to students who want to continue their education but are financially unable to pay for higher education. The Federal Government makes the plan possible but at no actual cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD to outline the plan in detail and to include therein a chart of figures.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. PHILBIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. RIVERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter to the Department of the Army on the progress of graves registration in Europe.

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two separate subjects.

Mr. HERLONG asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial entitled "Florida Likes Margarine," which appeared in the Orlando Morning Sentinel of January 23.

REREFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, by inadvertence the bill (H. R. 1551) to authorize the making of grants and loans to the States to assist in providing adequate public elementary- and secondary-school facilities was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A similar bill in the last session was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I understand a bill substantially similar was referred to that committee in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1551 and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, with reference to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] has just said, permit me to state a few facts which I think will clarify the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER], another member of the Public Lands Committee.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] said yesterday:

> It has come to my attention that the Democratic leadership in the House is violating not only the word but the spirit of the law.

He laments the fact that the committee passed a resolution authorizing the chairman of the committee and the chairmen of the respective subcommittees to employ the clerks and other personnel of the committee. I wish to call to the attention of the House the fact that a similar resolution was passed under the chairmanship of the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH]. It reads as follows:

> The chairman presented the name of Ernest A. Grant to be clerk of the committee and asked authority of the committee to appoint him and to fill the remaining positions of the clerical staff with such persons and at such times as he deemed advisable. Upon motion of Mr. ENGLE, seconded by Mr. MURDOCK, unanimous approval of the committee was given.
> By virtue of this resolution the following were added:
> 1. Mr. Reeve.
> 2. Mrs. Arnold.
> 3. Mrs. O'Brien.
> 4. Mr. Regan.
> 5. Mrs. Curtiss.
> 6. Mr. Soule.

These appointments were without any knowledge or further consent on the part of any member of the committee so far as I know. That authority was delegated to the chairman and we were happy for him to exercise it.

I can tell you that up to this date there has been only one member of the committee personnel who was not employed by the chairman who preceded me. That was Mr. Grant and it was not for any reason I was advised of but for reasons satisfactory to the chairman. All the members and clerks of the Public Lands Committee, regardless of their political affiliation—I can say all but one was a Republican—were employed by the chairman and members of the subcommittee who had been delegated this authority, if they were with the committee when it was organized.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] says that the phrase should be replaced by the words "only for deserving Democrats." He intends to say that the chairman of the committee is only employing deserving Democrats. I can say to you that he has retained all of the Republicans except one and I hope that we may find a deserving Democrat a job or two on this committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HÉBERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. David Lawrence.

COMMUNISM IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute and to salute the president of a great American university, the president of one of our great State universities on the far-West coast, the University of Washington. The president of the University of Washington and his board of trustees as well as those individuals responsible for accepting the challenge of communism in our institutions in this country by firing three professors, who are purported to have been members of the Communist Party, are to be congratulated.

I hope that the president of the University of Washington and the university itself have set the beacon light upon the highways of this country to pursue further the intrigues and the infiltration of communism into the universities of America.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Committee on Un-American Activities will take due cognizance of this action in the far West and proceed immediately to ferret out and find out to what extent our boys and girls are being led down the path of communism in this country by educators who are supposed to protect our American way of life.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a brief report of my European trip.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject of volunteer fire associations.

Mr. BREHM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by one of his constituents.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Marshall Andrews appearing in the Washington Post of last Sunday.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

TEN THINGS YOU CANNOT DO

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, certain that it never comes amiss for us to refresh our memories and perhaps clarify our thinking by recalling words once spoken by such men as Abraham Lincoln, may I read a few lines:

1. You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift.

2. You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.

3. You cannot help strong men by tearing down big men.

4. You cannot help the wage earner by pulling down the wage payer.

5. You cannot further the brotherhood of man by encouraging class hatred.

6. You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich.

7. You cannot establish sound security on borrowed money.

8. You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn.

9. You cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence.

10. You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL (at the request of Mr. JENNINGS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a poem.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a telegram from the Governor of Nebraska.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the inaugural address by His Excellency the Governor of the State of Connecticut, Chester Bowles. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $248.50, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE PERSONNEL

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REDDEN] seem to be disturbed about my attack yesterday on methods being employed in the committee for appointment of professional and clerical personnel. If the Members of the House will refer to page 515 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD they will find that I merely cited the provisions of the reorganization bill which requires that—

Each standing committee of the Senate and House of Representatives is authorized to appoint, by majority vote of the committee, not more than four professional staff members, in addition to the clerical staff, on a permanent basis without regard to political affiliation and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office—professional staff members shall not engage in any work other than committee business and no other duties may be assigned to them.

The Public Lands Committee on January 24 passed a resolution permitting the chairman and the subcommittee chairmen to hire the professional and clerical staff without the approval of the full committee. I maintain that this is a violation of the Reorganization Act which was passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress. I defy any Member on the majority side of this House to justify a resolution which bypasses the full committee.

I think the gentleman from New York is a little sensitive because he comes from Brooklyn, and under the seniority rule, he is to be chairman of the Public Lands Committee which deals with problems of irrigation, reclamation, public lands, mines and mining, Indian affairs, and Territories. He has, under the rules of the House, a perfect right to this chairmanship. The gentleman from New York, if my memory serves me right, attended but one meeting of the full committee during the last 2 years, and yet he is to be chairman of the same committee during the Eighty-first Congress. I cannot believe that he will fully understand many of the complicated problems of the Western States which come before the full committee. I am also apprehensive that unless the full committee has the right to pass upon the professional and clerical staff that individuals from the East who have no knowledge of the problems of the West will be serving as supposed experts.

I shall watch with a great deal of interest the individuals selected as our experts. I hope I have no further occasion to call your attention to the provisions of the Reorganization Act that are apparently to be disregarded.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. There will be no business on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SNOWSTORM DAMAGE

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] will place in the RECORD a telegram from the Governor of Nebraska. It relates to the damage being suffered by reason of the snowstorm. It will point out that in many places the snow is measuring on the level from 40 to 60 inches in depth. A continuous series of high winds and blizzards extending over several weeks have caused intense human suffering, loss of life and loss of property, and perhaps the livestock losses will run one-half of the total. It will further point out that the local communities are stretching themselves to the utmost degree to render adequate aid to remove the snow and relieve the suffering. All the agencies of the Federal Government are desperately needed in the storm territory, and needed now.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that every Federal agency extend to the stricken areas all possible aid. I shall support every measure that may bring help.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the announcement that the Committee on Education and Labor will meet in full committee tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock on the matter of reorganization.

I also wish to announce that we are ready to go ahead with the minimum-wage bill. I shall also put up to the committee tomorrow the matter of the pressure for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the reinstatement of the Wagner Act. These matters will be discussed within the committee tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education and Labor be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House providing there are not matters on the floor during whose consideration the Speaker will not permit us to sit; in other words, that the committee may sit when the House is not in session in the afternoons or when there is general debate on the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman asking for this right for 1 day, or for 1 week, or is he asking for it indefinitely during the session?

Mr. LESINSKI. I should like to have it indefinitely during the session, so we can go ahead with a few other bills we want to report out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated to the gentleman from Michigan that he would not recognize him to request permission for the committee to sit during any time that a bill was being read for amendment. Under the gentleman's speakership, committees have been allowed to sit when the House was considering bills in general debate, but the Chair will not recognize anyone to request permission for a committee to sit while the House is reading a bill for amendment. I think that is the policy the gentleman from Massachusetts has followed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I inquire if this is to be a precedent for the year? I do not know that in the past we ever gave such a consent for the whole session. We have given it from week to week, and I would not object to that, but I do want to know if this is to be a precedent so that any committee could get this permission covering an entire session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply puts the request. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday received that permission for the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Appropriations also has it. The question is whether or not the House wants to grant this privilege to other committees.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the distinguished gentleman who occupies the Chair think we should give this privilege to all the committees, or should we do as we have in the past?

The SPEAKER. The only thing the present occupant of the chair is charged with now is putting the request.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LESINSKI. During the last session of the Eightieth Congress we sat in the afternoons for 2 or 3 or 4 weeks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is quite true.

Mr. LESINSKI. We should like the same opportunity now, so we may go ahead with our legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If I may make my position clear, I am not objecting to expediting business, I am trying to maintain the integrity of the rules and procedure of the House. I have no objection to the gentleman's getting permission for his committee to sit next week or the week after, but I do think we ought to keep within the jurisdiction of the House the procedure; that is all. That is the reason I am making this inquiry, to see if the Speaker of the House is going to join in maintaining the rules as in the past.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair has been diligent for over 36 years in maintaining the procedure of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I appreciate that fact. For that reason, I wanted to call his attention to what was going on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never knows at all times what unanimous-consent request a gentleman is going to submit. The Chair would not want to enter an objection to a unanimous-consent request when there were many Members on either side of the House listening to the request, and has done so only once.

Mr. RANKIN. If we are going to retain the rules and procedures of the House of Representatives, I am of the opinion that no committee should be given the right to sit during the sessions of the House for more than 1 week at a time. If the gentleman will confine his request to the balance of this week, I will not object; but I am not going to agree that any committee from now on shall sit during the sessions of the House for the rest of the session, unless that permission is granted to all committees.

If the gentleman from Michigan wants to amend his request to cover this week only, that will be all right. And next week he can ask for that permission again.

Mr. LESINSKI. This is only a question of 1 day, then.

Mr. RANKIN. It is more than 1 day.

Mr. LESINSKI. I would not like to make the request for 1 day only. I amend my request then to cover the balance of this week and to include the following week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. RANKIN. I will not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 45) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, effective January 1, 1949, until otherwise provided by law, there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives compensation, to be paid monthly, to three messengers to the Committee on Ways and Means to be appointed by the chairman thereof, as follows:

One messenger at a basic salary of $1,500 per annum;

One messenger at a basic salary of $1,620 per annum;

One messenger (Harry Parker) at the rate of $1,560 per annum; but the authority contained herein for the last-named position of messenger shall terminate whenever a vacancy occurs therein after the first appointment.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BEATRICE KELLY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 23) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Beatrice Kelly, widow of John Joseph Kelly, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to 6 months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death, and an additional amount not to exceed $250 toward defraying the funeral expenses of said John Joseph Kelly.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANCES HANCOCK

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 42) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Frances Hancock, widow of A. C. Hancock, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to 6 months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death and an additional amount not to exceed $250 toward defraying the funeral expenses of said A. C. Hancock.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1946

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill

(H. R. 1252) to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, with respect to the eligibility for appointment in the executive branch of government of former professional staff members of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], who is author of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill read? We would like to know what is in it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 202 (g) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended (prohibiting the employment in the executive branch of the Government of any former professional staff member of a committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives for a period of 1 year after he ceases to be such a member), is hereby repealed.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H. R. 1252 in order that this Congress may do justice to some of the fine young men who are expected to remain as career men on the professional staffs of committees.

It so happened that quite a number of these fine young men, some from the executive departments downtown and some from outside the District of Columbia, came here with the expectation of being career men, but as the administration has changed there seems to have been a change of heart on the part of some of the committees with reference to their professional people, and under subtitle (h), now that they are off these committees as professional men or career men, they cannot go back to a position in the executive departments for 1 year. Some of them have gone out to industry looking for jobs. I know some who have gone to Philadelphia and some who have gone to New York. They tell their story to industry, but the heads of industry are not too familiar with political situations such as this and they say, "Well, your story sounds well but, after all, there must have been some reason why they let you go," indicating that they thought the career men were relieved of their position because of inefficiency or that there was something wrong with their character.

Some of these boys have come back very discouraged. Some of them could be taken back into the executive departments downtown were it not for the provision (h) of section 202 of the Reorganization Act. They have families; they have children; and it has worked out as a most unjust provision of the act.

I have consulted with the Speaker and with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the majority leader, and the leaders on this side, and as far as possible among other Members, and I have yet to find any objection to this resolution. I hope it will be passed unanimously.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say I can see no objection whatever to it.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. I might say to the gentleman from New York that one of the principal purposes of this section which the gentleman is now seeking to repeal was to prevent the professional staffs of the committees of Congress from being offered jobs by the executive departments downtown. We have not yet succeeded in creating a career service for the congressional staffs, unfortunately. Therefore, there will probably be a year or 2 years or 3 years in which we will go through a period of trial and error and experimentation. Many of the men who had a lifetime of service downtown, who were trained in these committee jobs, will in the present change be suffering a great handicap economically. I certainly think at this time it would be wise to permit the repeal of this section and then if the legislative staffs are threatened by jobs offered by executive departments, I am sure that Congress will reenact this section if that threat occurs.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I may say that the committee of which the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] is chairman felt that this legislation should be passed at an early date because of the fact that there are a number of persons who are apparently going to be out of employment and are not going to be able to go back to the departments from which they were drawn for professional services. We thought this legislation was important.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman very much.

I wish to take this occasion to thank the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] for her fine cooperation and the promptness with which this bill was reported out by her committee.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDRESS BY HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], a very outstanding Member of this body, has 20 minutes reserved today to discuss the rules of the House. His discussion will be completely nonpartisan. I want to make this announcement and urge the membership to remain upon the floor and hear the gentleman from Michigan, particularly those who have recently joined us, because I think I am safe in assuring them that they will find very profitable what the gentleman from Michigan has to say.

COMMUNISM IN UNIVERSITY FACULTIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to add my voice to the statement made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT] congratulating the president of the University of Washington for beginning a house cleaning—getting Communists out of the faculty of that great institution. That house cleaning is long overdue, not only in the University of Washington, but in many other of the leading universities and colleges throughout the country.

You have heard all this criticism of the Committee on Un-American Activities. A great deal of it has come from these subsidized professors such as Harlow Shapley, of Harvard, who belongs or did belong to a half dozen or dozen Communist-front organizations.

I see where they have organized a Communist cell in the student body of the University of North Carolina. It may be going on in my State, but I want to tell you now that one of our gravest menaces is this attempt to poison the minds of the youth of this Nation, using everything from the crossword puzzles to motion pictures, from the radio to the local press, anything into which they can get their insidious propaganda. They are using every effort to poison the minds of the youth of this Nation, to undermine and wreck this Government and to destroy the American way of life.

I congratulate the University of Washington on its efforts to clean these Communists out of its faculty and help to save America for Americans.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MCDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. ELSTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Cincinnati Times-Star of January 14.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. JONES of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is recognized for 20 minutes.

ORDER IN THE HOUSE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, in that matchless volume of Hebrew literature, the Bible, the following passage appears:

Set thine house in order. (Isaiah 38: 1.)

When our constituents come to Washington to visit their Nation's Capital, it is almost certain that they will visit this Capitol Building. Their presence is noticed daily when they occupy these balconies, especially when Congress is in session.

I doubt if there is a Member in this body, who has served any length of time, who has not heard with chagrin and embarrassment the unfavorable comment and harsh criticism leveled at our lack of dignity and decorum in this historic Chamber.

Information from officials of the House indicates that hardly a week passes without complaints regarding our habits and conduct on the floor.

Here in the House of Representatives the people speak and here their voice is heard. This is their forum, established by our forefathers. From them come the noble and distinct character of American institutions.

The very walls of this Chamber echo with the voices of our great and our past. It is rich in the traditions of our Nation. Many whose names adorn the pages of history labored in this room to serve the cause of freedom and self-government. They were the torch bearers of humanity's forward march.

May God help us to preserve their influence and labors by reverence for this notable place and forbid that we should ever be irreverent toward it and the memory of those who made our day possible.

Our position as Members of Congress is one of great responsibility. If a proper attitude and proper conduct toward the position to which we have been elevated is wanting, we deface and impoverish our position in the eyes of those who pass this way.

Whether in the game of life or in a game of football, infraction of the rules brings punishment and penalty. The penalty we pay individually and collectively is the loss of respect, the loss of prestige, the loss of faith and confidence, and a gradual breaking down of self-government by a free people.

This House of Representatives is governed by rules, some as old as the Government itself. They were designed to govern the conduct of Members on this floor and the orderly procedure of our legislative work.

Not one of us here is entirely blameless for breaking the rules of the House. In a thoughtless moment, and unconsciously, we all have broken the written and long-established code of conduct for this floor. Many of the older Members, knowingly, and many of the newer Members, unknowingly, because of unfamiliarity with the rules, have allowed certain habits to violate the proprieties of this body.

For the benefit of the many new Members, and to refresh the memories of the older Members, including myself, the observations I am about to make are confined solely to the rules governing our conduct on this floor. My remarks are wholly impersonal and are not intended as a scolding of any Member individually or of the House collectively.

I now come to the rules violated daily in this forum. How should a Member address our Presiding Officer? At public gatherings throughout the country it is customary and in good taste to say, "Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen," and so forth. In this Hall such a salutation is improper and a distinct breach of the rule. The rule requires a Member to address himself to "Mr. Speaker" or, if the House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, to "Mr. Chairman." To add more is a slight upon the Speaker who represents the House in its organization. When we address the Chair, we address the entire membership of the House.

It is a violation of precedent, and bad form, to conclude an address by adding the words, "I thank you." There is no necessity for any Member to thank anyone. We speak as a matter of right.

Express provision is made for the manner in which a Member may address the House. Rule XIV, clause 1, reads:

When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor, or from the Clerk's desk.

Committees of the House should not be designated as: "The Rules Committee," "the Appropriations Committee," and so forth. The proper way to designate any committee of the House is to say: "The Committee on Rules," "the Committee on Appropriations," and so forth.

Another rule violated daily is rule XIV, clause 7, which provides:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no Member shall walk out of or across the hall, nor, when a Member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair.

It has become a custom for Members to walk in front of a Member while he is addressing the House from the lecterns here in the well of the House. Such practices are a violation of a long-established rule of this body and are a contributing cause to the confusion and distraction evidenced on this floor from day to day. To walk in front of a Member who is speaking is objectionable and discourteous.

Another part of clause 7, rule XIV, grossly violated by many Members, reads as follows:

During the session of the House no Member * * * shall smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time.

What constitutes the floor of the House? The space behind the rail is the floor of the House as much as the space in front of the Speaker's rostrum. Smoking behind the rail is smoking on the floor of the House and equally an infraction of the rule; it is most obnoxious to our visitors in the galleries. Walking into the Chamber with a cigar or pipe held in the mouth, whether lighted or not, is an invitation for caustic criticism and disparaging remarks on the part of the public who come to visit our sessions.

A practice as defenseless as it is objectionable is the habit of placing one's feet against or on top of the seat in front of one. This habit, a clear and distinct breach of the rules of decorum of this House, is most noticeable from the galleries and draws the sharpest criticism and adverse comment from those who come to visit this legislative body in action.

Reading newspapers on this floor when the House is in session may not fall within the text of any definite rule, but such a habit conveys to the public, and to the Members of the House, an impression of the want of interest, indifference to legislative duty, and failure of attention to the matter under discussion on the floor.

A practice that has grown to be a habit is that of referring to a Member in the second person as "you" or "your." Some distinguished Members, with long service here, have designated their colleagues by their given names, such as "John" and "Jim." We all know better. These are plain violations of ordinary parliamentary procedure. Each one of us can make his contribution in preserving dignity and orderly conduct during our sessions by observing and obeying the rules of the House. The proper way to address a colleague is "the gentleman or gentlewoman from Maine," or whichever State the Member represents.

Dignity and decorum commensurate with the greatness of this body, and the power we possess, should prevail at all times in the discharge of our duty to the Nation. These matters may seem small, unimportant, and of no serious consequence in themselves, but upon the whole they are destructive of the respect and confidence of the people. Let every Member constitute himself a committee of one to see to it that the rules are respected and obeyed.

By reason of our membership here, each Member is clothed with tremendous power over the lives and destiny of a mighty people. With that power goes a corresponding responsibility to discharge the trust reposed in us by the people. Every word we speak, every decision we render, is weighed with the position we hold. The confidence and faith of the people in the legislative branch of their Government must be preserved if the Republic of the United States is to survive. May we be worthy of the high honor conferred upon us as Members of Congress by discharging our responsibility to the Nation with that dignity and decorum which the people have a right to expect from us.

May the visitor to these galleries observe in us a genuine respect for this House of Commons of the American people, and leave with greater love for our Republic and greater pride in his American citizenship.

Holy Scripture again reminds us:

Let all things be done decently and in order. (I Corinthians 14: 40.)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in one an editorial letter and in the other a magazine article.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

TAFT-HARTLEY ACT

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor indicated that there would be hearings held by that committee this week, I presume on the wage-hour law. I understand, however, that the question of the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act is coming up very soon. So that we may be advised as to the reasons for repeal, I ask those who are asking for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act to some time, either from the well of the House or by extension of remarks in the RECORD, point specifically to those provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which they think are wrong.

I am familiar with the general broad statement that it is a slave-labor bill, but if there are provisions of the act to which there is specific objection I should like to know what they are.

I am moved to make this request because of what was said in a debate last night and on previous occasions when I have heard the attorneys for the CIO condemn the act as a whole. But when specific questions are put to them as, for example, last night I heard a former member of the Committee on Labor endorse, as I remember, six or seven provisions of that act. So I make this request sincerely and, in all kindness, so that those of us who expect to vote to continue that act may have the objections and we may change our minds and go along with the administration, which is now demanding the complete repeal of the act, if the reasons given are sound.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] is recognized

OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk to you for a few minutes, perhaps not the whole 15, regarding the proposed repeal of all taxes on margarine that is colored yellow.

I do not come before you this evening with theories, I come before you with first-hand information. All my life I have been a farmer. I began milking cows when I was 10 years old, and that was 50 years ago. I have milked cows with my hands since the vote was counted the 2d day of November in the year 1948. I am not only not ashamed of that fact, I am proud of it.

All my life I have been helping to produce the beef, the pork, the milk, the eggs, and the wheat that has helped to make this Nation great, that has helped us to win the wars in which we have engaged, not because we wish strife, because we never did, but because those wars were thrust upon us. Through two wars I have been asked by my Government to expand and increase the production of food on my farm.

I have always heeded that call to the very best of my ability. I am proud of that fact. I stand before you this afternoon representing the greatest agricultural district in the State of Missouri, if not the greatest agricultural district in the Nation—a place where we practice diversified farming, a place where we trust the dairy cow to help us with our soil-conservation measures, where we trust the dairy cow to help us to keep our hills and our sloping land tied down in grass so that the remainder of our soil fertility will not drift down the Mississippi River out into the Gulf of Mexico. Recently I drove an automobile from Butler, Mo., to St. Louis, Vincennes, Ind., Louisville, Ky., Parkersburg, W. Va., and on to Washington, D. C. I watched as I drove along. I saw thousands of fields with 70 percent to 90 percent of their topsoil gone. There were rows of corn stubs up and down the slopes, and tobacco stubs. The slopes would run as high as 20 percent. There were little piles of corn fodder by the barns and little stacks of broom sage stacked up around a pole, about 1 ton in a place, that no animal in the world would eat except to keep life in its body. There was no alfalfa. There was no red clover. There was no sweetclover. There were no terraces. I will tell you gentlemen without fear of contradiction that the destruction of the topsoil in the United States of America is a greater menace to our Nation today than communism or Russia or anything else; and unless we conserve our soil, this Nation is headed for destruction, war or no war.

Our topsoil is now half gone. In the interests of soil conservation, I want to see the dairy cow and the dairy farmer protected. It has been thrown in my face since I have come to Washington that I am dominated by the dairy lobby. I have no first-hand information as to what a dairy lobbyist looks like. Up to this minute I have never seen one, and neither have I seen a lobbyist for the margarine industry. As far as I know, there are none of them. But I do represent my dairy farmers, and I am irrevocably opposed to oleomargarine being sold in the markets of the United States colored yellow. What is yellow margarine? It is imitation butter. Whoever saw an imitation of anything as good as the thing it sought to imitate? I never have.

I am ready to vote for the repeal of all taxes on oleomargarine, if they will color it red, or color it green, or color it purple, or leave it white. But I do think that if the American dairy farmer does not have a copyright on the yellow color that God and nature gave to butter, then he ought to have that copyright.

How many of you gentlemen ever stepped out of your door some morning in a 40-mile wind full of ice, when the thermometer registered 10 below zero, and made your way to an unheated barn and milked 25 cows? I have done it many a time—not 1 day a week, not 5 days a week, but 7 days a week, 365 days in the year. No 5-day week for the dairy farmer; no 8-hour day. The milk truck calls at my place at 6:30 in the morning. My boys are out there now with snow a foot deep in zero temperature, starting to milk at 5 o'clock in the morning. How would you like it? There is no theory about this. You milk twice a day. Christmas Day, Washington's Birthday, Fourth of July, Sunday. There is no dairy farmer who does not milk every day. I do not want to see a synthetic imitation butter ruin and destroy our market.

I realize that perhaps there are people whose incomes are so low that it may be necessary for them to eat oleomargarine instead of butter. But I do not want them to be deceived by the yellow color into thinking they are buying and eating butter.

There is another thing I want to talk about for a minute. Occasionally I meet a man who says, "Oh, it doesn't make any difference. You sell your whole milk." I am not selling butter. Our milk goes to Kansas City. Let me tell you what the Federal Market Administrator bases the price of milk on in the Kansas City area. He bases it on the market price of 92-score butter in Chicago. Anything that ruins the price of the 92-score butter in Chicago ruins the price of my milk in Kansas City.

I live a hard life, and my boys and my neighbors, to keep our part of the country in beef and butter and milk and cheese. I and my neighbors are entitled to the protection of the yellow color that God gave to butter.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution calling for the investigation of the handpicking of juries in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York.

I shall press my resolution. I am confident that I shall obtain a hearing on it. The brazen admission by Judge Knox, of the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, that he is responsible for the hand-picking of juries is a challenge to the American people and cannot be ignored. This corruption of our jury system warrants a thorough investigation and the removal of those responsible for it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMATHERS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech by Senator KEFAUVER.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, January 27, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

109. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to extend to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey the provisions of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

110. A letter from the Executive Secretary, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting a report covering the contracts negotiated by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics during the period July 1 to December 31, 1948; to the Committee on Armed Services.

111. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting a report relative to the adjudication of certain claims resulting from the evacuation of certain persons of Japanese ancestry under military orders; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

112. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for fiscal years 1949 and 1950 in the amount of $37,937.52 and $125,115, respectively (H. Doc. No. 40); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

113. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the fiscal year 1949 in the amount of $480,702,340, together with certain proposed provisions and increases in limitations pertaining to existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 44); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 1949

The VICE PRESIDENT. Prayer will be offered by Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, minister, Calvary Baptist Church, of Washington, D. C.

Dr. CRANFORD. The prayer I shall offer this morning was written for this session by Dr. Peter Marshall, as one of the last things he did before he died.

PRAYER

Deliver us, our Father, from futile hopes and from clinging to lost causes, that we may move into ever-growing calm and ever-widening horizons.

Where we cannot convince, let us be willing to persuade, for small deeds done are better than great deeds planned.

We know that we cannot do everything. But help us to do something. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 24, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE FILED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 24th instant,

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on January 25, 1949, reported favorably the nomination of James E. Webb, of North Carolina, to be Under Secretary of State, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 2) thereon.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1252. An act to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 with respect to the eligibility for appointment in the executive branch of the Government of former professional staff members of committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives; and

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes.

RELIEF OF PALESTINE REFUGEES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed letter from the Acting Secretary of State and the accompanying draft legislation to authorize an appropriation for a special contribution by the United States to the United Nations for the relief of Palestine refugees. In submitting this proposed legislation, I wish to invite attention to the provisions of the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations emphasizing the critical situation of these refugees and urging all states members of the United Nations to make voluntary contributions as soon as possible to meet their needs.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 27, 1949.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, on this particular matter I desire to say that the Committee on Foreign Relations has voted favorably to report a resolution carrying out the President's requests, but it has not formally been reported to the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred, as indicated:

RESERVATION OF CERTAIN INDIAN LANDS

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, reporting, pursuant to law, that no reservations were made during the calendar year 1948 of lands within Indian reservations valuable for power or reservoir sites or necessary for use in connection with irrigation projects; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

DONATIONS BY NAVY DEPARTMENT TO NONPROFIT INSTITUTIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, reporting, pursuant to law, a list of institutions and organizations, all nonprofit and eligible, which have requested donations from the Navy Department; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR RECREATIONAL PURPOSES

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, reporting, pursuant to law, that no exchanges of lands classified chiefly valuable for recreational purposes for lands of equal value or equal quantity, had been consummated during the calendar year 1948; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

REPORT ON ADJUDICATION OF CERTAIN CLAIMS OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE ANCESTRY

A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to the adjudication of certain claims resulting from the evacuation of certain persons of Japanese ancestry under military orders (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT ON AGREEMENTS AND PURCHASES AND CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS RELATING TO NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES

A letter from the Director, Naval Petroleum Reserves, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on all agreements, and all purchases and condemnation proceedings entered into under the act of June 30, 1938 (52 Stat. 1252), as amended by the act approved June 17, 1944 (58 Stat. 280) (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT ON LAND ACQUISITIONS

A letter from the Chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on land acquisitions by that Commission, for the fiscal year 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Public Works.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, advising the Senate of the appointment, pursuant to the act of July 15, 1939, of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], as members of that committee to the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy.

BOARD OF VISITORS, UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE ACADEMY

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to announce that, pursuant to Public Law 301, Seventy-eighth Congress, I have appointed to the Board of Visitors to the United States Merchant Marine Academy the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

Resolutions adopted by the Townsend District Council of the Fifth Congressional District, Orlando, Fla., favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan, to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

A memorial of several citizens of the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the seating of Senator FERGUSON; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a message forwarded via the Governor of Guam, extending greetings and best wishes for a successful and prosperous New Year; ordered to lie on the table.

IMPRISONMENT OF ARCHBISHOP STEPINAC AND CARDINAL MINDSZENTY—RESOLUTIONS OF NEW YORK LEGISLATURE

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, the arrest and imprisonment of Archbishop Stepinac, of Yugoslavia, during the fall of 1946 and the recent arrest, in last December, of Cardinal Mindszenty, of Hungary, are two bitter current examples of authoritarian deprivation of civil and religious liberty. As a liberty-loving people, we are distressed over both such oppression and the implications of such oppression.

I have received two resolutions condemning this action by the Hungarian Government and calling upon our Federal Government to exercise every legitimate force to bring about the immediate release of Cardinal Mindszenty. These two resolutions are not identical, but come from each house of the New York State Legislature, and I request that they be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The resolutions were received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, January 10, 1949.

(By Mr. Feinberg)

Whereas the whole civilized world and all individuals who believe in God, regardless of race, creed, or denomination, have been profoundly shocked by the arrest and imprisonment of His Eminence Josef Cardinal Mindszenty by the Communist government of Hungary; and

Whereas it appears that there is no justification for this arrest and imprisonment but that it is actuated solely by the desire to destroy religious freedom and freedom of worship; and

Whereas every right-minded person in this country must desire with all his heart to do something to bring about the release of this great churchman. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of New York express its utter condemnation of the act of the Hungarian Government; and be it further resolved, That the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and the Members of the Congress from this State be urged to do everything in their power and to use every legitimate force to bring about the immediate release of Cardinal Mindszenty; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the United States Senators and the Members of Congress from New York State and to the Hungarian Legation in Washington.

By order of the senate.

WILLIAM S. KING,
Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 10, 1949.

(By Mr. Douglas)

Whereas the whole civilized world and all individuals who believe in God regardless of race, creed, or denomination, have been profoundly shocked by the arrest and imprisonment of His Eminence Josef Cardinal Mindszenty by the Communist government of Hungary; and

Whereas it appears that there is no justification for this arrest and imprisonment but that it is actuated solely by the desire to destroy religious freedom and freedom of worship; and

Whereas every right-minded person in this country must desire with all his heart to do something to bring about the release of this great churchman: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Assembly of the State of New York express its utter condemnation of the act of the Hungarian Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and the Members of the Congress from this State be urged to do everything in their power and to use every legitimate force to bring about the immediate release of Cardinal Mindszenty; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the United States Senators and the Members of Congress from New York State and to the Hungarian Legation in Washington.

By order of the assembly:

ANSLEY B. BORKOWSKI,
Clerk.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself I ask unanimous consent to submit a concurrent resolution stating that it is the sense of the Congress that the action of the Yugoslavian and Hungarian Governments constitutes persecution for political and religious beliefs and violates the Charter of the United Nations. The resolution further declares that, as a member nation, the United States should submit to the next General Assembly of the United Nations the issues raised by these deplorable incidents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can submit the concurrent resolution only by unanimous consent at this time. The Chair suggests that the Senator defer submitting the resolution until we reach that order of business.

Mr. IVES. The reason I ask unanimous consent to have the text of the concurrent resolution, which is very brief, to be inserted at this particular point in my remarks is that it is in connection with the two previous resolutions I have submitted and asked to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 9), submitted by Mr. IVES (for himself and Mr. WAGNER), was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas on September 18, 1946, Archbishop Aloysius Stepinac, Roman Catholic primate of Yugloslavia, was arrested on charges of committing "crimes against the people" and of "being the center of terrorist opposition" to the Government of Yugoslavia; and

Whereas on October 11, 1946, the said Archbishop Stepinac was sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 16 years and deprived of his civil rights for 5 years; and

Whereas the conduct of the trial of the said Archbishop Stepinac which resulted in such sentence was a travesty on justice and a violation of the fundamental rights of man; and

Whereas on December 26, 1948, Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, Roman Catholic primate of Hungary, was arrested on "suspicion of treason, attempting to overthrow the democratic regime, espionage, and foreign-currency abuses" and has been held incommunicado since such date; and

Whereas the charges upon which the said Cardinal Mindszenty was arrested constitute distortions of truth and justice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the arrest and imprisonment of the two eminent Roman Catholic primates, Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia and Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary, (a) constitute persecution on account of political and religious beliefs, (b) violate the declaration in the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, namely: "to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men * * *," and (c) violate the third purpose stated in article I of the Charter of the United Nations, namely: "To achieve international cooperation * * * in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion." It is further the sense of the Congress that the issues raised by such violations should be submitted by the United States to the United Nations at the next meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

RESOLUTION OF NOTRE DAME CLUB OF LA CROSSE, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a resolution which I have received from Mr. August Grams, Jr., Secretary of the Notre Dame Club of La Crosse.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Notre Dame Club of La Crosse, Wis., in the belief that the Government of the United States recognizes the existence of a divine being, hereby vigorously protests the action of the representatives of the United States at the United Nations Conference for their failure to support this belief and prevent the withdrawal from the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights, the clause that all human beings "are created in the image and likeness of God," and urges that such action be taken as necessary to include in the Declaration of Human Rights recognition of God from whom all human rights are derived.

ACTING POSTMASTER AT CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA—RESOLUTION OF AMERICAN LEGION POST

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in my home town of Cedar Rapids there has been a considerable dispute over the selection of a postmaster to fill the vacancy which now exists. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in my remarks a letter from R. D. Spooner, commander of Hanford Post, No. 5, of the American Legion, together with a resolution officially adopted in connection with this matter by that post.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HANFORD POST NO. 5,
THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Cedar Rapids, Iowa, January 19, 1949.

BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER,
Senator from Iowa, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR HICK: I am enclosing with this letter copy of an important resolution adopted at a meeting of Hanford Post in Cedar Rapids at a post meeting January 19, 1949.

This resolution was the result of a very unfortunate appointment by the Democratic State Central Committee which, in filling the position of acting postmaster in Cedar Rapids, chose a nonveteran over a qualified veteran. That veteran was John E. Greenlee.

The nonveteran chosen for the position is 36 years old. John E. Greenlee is 37 years old and is a veteran of World War II who served in the Navy as chief turret gun captain aboard the cruiser Houston. The Houston was torpedoed by the Japanese during the first battle of the Philippine Sea. Mr. Greenlee received a personal commendation from Adm. William F. Halsey for heroic action in that engagement. He also received the Purple Heart Medal for shell fragments in his head and legs.

Greenlee is a successful businessman and is an active civic leader, as you know. He was the first World War II commander of this American Legion Post of 3,098 members.

This resolution was adopted by the executive committee on January 11 and by the post membership January 18. Both adoptions were by unanimous vote.

Yours very truly,

HANFORD POST NO. 5,
R. D. SPOONER, Commander.

Whereas it has come to the attention of the executive committee of Hanford Post, No. 5, American Legion, Department of Iowa, that the Democratic State Central Committee of the State of Iowa has seen fit to recommend the appointment of a nonveteran of military age during World War II as the appointee to the position of acting postmaster of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and

Whereas this appointment involved the choice of this nonveteran over a qualified veteran; and

Whereas this choice was contrary to community and national sentiment and policy: Now be it

Resolved, That this executive committee does hereby recommend that Hanford Post No. 5 adopt unanimously the following resolution:

"Be it resolved by Hanford Post, No. 5, American Legion, Department of Iowa, That inasmuch as the principle of veterans' preference has been long established at all governmental levels and has become an integral part of our community and national policy, that we hereby urge that this policy be adhered to strictly in all recommendations and appointments; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the chairman of all political parties—national, State, and county—and to our elected representatives."

Adopted unanimously by post executive committee January 11, 1949.

Attest:

R. D. SPOONER,

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Armed Services:

S. 278. A bill to prevent retroactive checkage of payments erroneously made to certain retired officers of the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 21); and

S. 279. A bill to authorize the advance on the retired list of Lieut. John T. McDermott, United States Navy (retired), to the grade of lieutenant commander; without amendment (Rept. No. 22).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. 307. A bill for the relief of Engebert Axer; without amendment (Rept. No. 15);

S. 315. A bill for the relief of Dr. Chung Kwai Lui; without amendment (Rept. No. 16);

S. 331. A bill for the relief of Ghetel Pollak Kahan, Magdalena Linda Kahan (wife), and Susanna Kahan (daughter, 12 years old); without amendment (Rept. No. 17);

S. 335. A bill for the relief of Claris U. Yeadon; without amendment (Rept. No. 18); and

S. 485. A bill for the relief of Joyce Violet Angel; without amendment (Rept. No. 19).

By Mr. O'CONOR, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

S. J. Res. 22. Joint resolution to authorize the issuance of a special series of stamps commemorative of the three hundredth anniversary of Annapolis, Md.; without amendment (Rept. No. 20).

By Mr. MAYBANK, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 547. A bill to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans; without amendment (Rept. No. 23); and

S. Res. 33. Resolution authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to make certain expenditures and employ temporary assistants and providing for the transfer of certain records; with an amendment (Rept. No. 14), and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES BY SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably Senate Resolution 28, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 28), as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Study the Problems of American Small Business Enterprises, created by Senate Resolution 20, Eightieth Congress, agreed to January 24, 1947, and extended by Senate Resolution 153, Eightieth Congress, agreed to July 26, 1947, and Senate Resolution 191, Eightieth Congress, agreed to March 15, 1948, and Senate Resolution 280, Eightieth Congress, agreed to December 31, 1948, is hereby authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $12,668.24 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for the same purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from Arizona if the resolution continues or extends the authority of the Small Business Committee beyond February 1, 1949, the date on which it is supposed to expire?

Mr. HAYDEN. No, it does not. There was submitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration a budget which shows that there was a balance of some $4,000 available after the first of January, which, with the additional sum provided by the resolution would enable the Committee to wind up its affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS IN INDUSTRY, ETC.—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, I report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 547) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eightieth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans, and I submit a report (No. 23) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I asked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business will be concluded in a moment. The Chair suggests to the Senator that he await the disposition of the morning business.

COMMUNICATIONS STUDY—REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a brief report filed this week by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, dealing with a study of various communication matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This is an interim report by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which was appointed by Chairman Wallace H. White, Jr., on June 19, 1948, to study certain communications problems. The subcommittee originally consisted of Senators White, Tobey, and McFarland; on July 30, 1948, Senator White resigned and appointed in his stead Senator Hawkes. The subcommittee on August 8, 1948, adopted an agenda (which is printed herewith as an appendix) and began inquiry and the assembling of data. However, Senator Hawkes was unable to participate actively in the work of the subcommittee and this interim report is submitted by Senators TOBEY and MCFARLAND.

It will be noted that the agenda adopted by the subcommittee outlines an extremely broad study involving practically every phase of communications. Obviously, in the period thus far available to the subcommittee, only a few of the agenda items could be surveyed. The subcommittee, therefore, limited itself to a consideration of what it regarded as the more pressing matters from a time standpoint. In making this report, and such recommendations as it deems pertinent, the subcommittee believes it important to emphasize that a communications study of the scope outlined in the agenda should be continued and carried to a conclusion in the interest of a sound national and international communications industry, the national defense, and the general public interest.

1. Organization of Commission and administrative problems: Basically, a major problem in the communications field relates to the regulatory agency itself. It has been well said by an experienced legislator that "good administrators make a bad law work but bad administrators can vitiate even the best law." No independent agency in our Government over the years has been the subject of more criticism and legislative investigation, much of it earned, than has the Federal Communications Commission.

We are of the opinion that the administrative faults, which still exist, are due basically to an archaic and clumsy organization of its administrative machinery. We are aware that the Commission, even today, frequently ignores and bypasses its own rules in arriving at decisions; that it continues the extra-legal conduct of judicial lawmaking which is repugnant to sound regulation; and that on occasion it arrogates to itself powers and authority which we fail to perceive in the basic act.

Our survey of Commission operations and our consultations with Commissioners themselves convince us that a great deal of the very valid criticism made against the Commission could be eliminated, or at least modified, by an internal reorganization.

We are informed that the Commission has prepared and tentatively approved the draft of an order modifying its internal organization. We are, in a general way, familiar with the broad outlines of that plan. Without approving or rejecting its plan, we offer the following observations and recommendations.

The Administrative Procedures Act and the Commission's own policy provides for the use of hearing examiners in all contested cases. Such hearing examiners, under present procedure, hear evidence and prepare what is known as a proposed decision. That decision may, or may not, become the final decision of the Commission as a whole. During the past 10 years or more, as a result of conferences and recommendations made by bar associations, administrative bodies, and the judiciary generally there has been general recognition and approval of the hearing examiner system in order to speed up procedures in administrative bodies. There also has been frequent reference to the creation of divisions or panels within commissions to divide the work and thus expedite final decisions in contested cases. This background was undoubtedly one of the factors that motivated Senator WHITE in proposing a panel system for the Federal Communications Commission in his bill of the Eightieth Congress and may have actuated the Commission itself in drafting its proposed plan.

We must observe that the panel system has its weaknesses. We believe it is one of the axioms of judicial procedure that the body created to render decisions is expected to render those decisions as a whole. Litigants have a right to expect that a decision which may vitally affect them has been passed upon by the entire Commission created to make such adjudications. Many Members of Congress feel, and we believe rightly, that creation of a panel system may result in bypassing of the Commission as a whole with contested decisions being left to three Commissioners, which could mean under certain circumstances that one Commissioner finally decides the issue. On the other hand, we are aware that the Commission must find a method of speeding up its work and reducing the current backlog of cases, which we are informed represents as much as 15 months' work.

It is our view, however, that adoption of the panel system without enactment of legislation specifically dealing with the subject is not contemplated by the existing law which contemplates that all decisions must be made by the whole Commission. We are of the opinion that any attempt to make decisions by less than the whole Commission would not be in accord with the Communications Act. But we believe that the work of the Commission would be expedited by following a procedure somewhat similar to that of our appellate courts. We therefore suggest the following.

With respect to contested cases, in which two or more private litigants, or the Commission and a private litigant, are involved, we firmly believe that the decision should be that of the whole Commission. We are of the opinion, however, that even these cases can be handled more expeditiously with full protection to the rights of litigants by assigning the case to a group or subcommittee of the Commission for writing of the final decision. However, the same group or subcommittee of Commissioners should not be assigned to every case or type of case; it is essential that all Commissioners participate actively in all phases of operation of the Commission. This permits the fullest consideration of contested cases by all of the Commissioners and permits those who dissent from the majority view to prepare a dissent.

In this connection, we deem it important to emphasize that in the preparation of such final decisions by the Commission as a whole, it should have the legal aid of personnel who are not a part of the legal staff who prosecuted or represented the Commission during the hearing or rehearing procedure. The present system in which members of the Legal Division who prepared the case in the first instance and who prosecuted it, or represented the Commission viewpoint during the hearings, also aid in the preparation of the final decision is not conducive to production of a fair and unbiased decision, we believe. We do not suggest that the staff of the Legal Department would wittingly twist the law. We do suggest that they are human and that having been advocates of one view during the proceedings it is only natural that they will attempt to carry that view through in the final decision. We believe the Commission can obviate many of the criticisms that have been made on this score by the creation of a legal review board, not subject to the jurisdiction of the Law Department, whose sole duty would be to aid the Commission itself in the legal review of the hearing examiner's proposed decision and the preparation of the Commission's final decision.

A somewhat similar procedure to that outlined above for contested cases also could be followed with respect to uncontested cases. The decision prepared by the group or subcommittee of Commissioners to which each such case was assigned would naturally become the final decision of the whole Commission unless objected to by the majority.

This leads to consideration of a further point with respect to the present organization of the Law, Engineering, and Accounting Departments of the Commission. Our observation is the present structure is not the most efficient, does not make the best use of the personnel, and that it does not square with current problems of the Commission. We are of the opinion that the Commission should be organized along the lines of its work load—i. e., broadcast, common carrier, and safety and special services—and that the Law, Engineering, and Accounting Departments be made functioning units in such a divisional set-up, with the general counsel, the chief accountant, and the chief engineer directly under the Commission itself. It would appear that such a functional organization would permit far more rapid consideration of applications and cases, and at the same time free the responsible heads for consideration of over-all administration.

We think it important to emphasize that the rule-making function must, of course, remain as it is today, the duty and responsibility of the Commission as a whole. This and other specific duties placed upon the whole Commission by law should and must remain the responsibility of the whole Commission.

We are informed that the Commission's proposed plan for modification of its organization contemplates that the chairman shall not be a member of any of the panels, except as a substitute for a member not present, and shall devote his principal efforts to being the chief administrative officer of the agency. While we agree that there is considerable merit in this proposal and that some of the broader problems of communications dealing with frequency allocations and revisions of rules require closer attention than they have received, we believe that a note of caution is necessary here. The chairman is the responsible head of the agency and it cannot, by its own rules, lift from him the responsibility that the law lays upon him. We already have made clear our opinion in regard to the adoption of a panel system without a change in the present law. However, the procedure suggested by your subcommittee would permit the chairman to spend more time on administrative duties.

2. Cease-and-desist orders: Our conferences with Commissioners and a study of decisions and actions of the Commission lead us to the conclusion that early attention should be given to improving that section of the Communications Act dealing with revocation of licenses (sec. 312). The present law provides that a station license may be revoked for false statements either in the application, or in the statement of fact which may be required from time to time, which would have warranted the Commission to refuse the license on an original application; or for failure to operate substantially as set forth in the license; or for violation or failure to observe any of the restrictions or conditions of the act or of the regulations of the Commission authorized by the act or a treaty ratified by the United States. This makes obvious, therefore, that revocation is the only administrative penalty for violations ranging from the most serious to the most minor, including even innocent violation of technical regulations.

We do not believe that such a situation makes for fair and efficient administration. Obviously the Commission would be reluctant to revoke a license for a minor offense and therefore minor offenses may be committed almost with impunity. Moreover, there is no distinction between the gravity of offenses; it is as if the penalty were the same for murder and for illegal parking of an automobile. It is our opinion that numerous actions which deserve censure and action thereby escape while at the same time the licensee has hanging over his head the final penalty of losing his license for a minor offense.

Your subcommittee recommends, therefore, the enactment of a section which would authorize the issuance of cease-and-desist orders for less serious violations. The revocation penalty would remain in effect for two classes of violations: (1) for cases in which the Commission learns of facts or conditions after the granting of a license which would have warranted it to refuse a license originally had it known those facts; (2) for violation of a cease-and-desist order. Both the revocation and cease-and-desist procedure would remain, of course, subject to judicial appeal.

Such a provision was a part of the White bill (sec. 12 of S. 1333, 80th Cong.) and had the general support of the Commission, the industry, and members of the bar who practice before the Commission. The cease-and-desist-order procedure has had considerable trial in other administrative agencies and has proved generally satisfactory.

3. Radio and wire communications frauds: Your subcommittee recommends the enactment, either as part of the Communications Act or as part of the general criminal code, of a fraud statute similar to the postal fraud statute (18 U. S. C. 338) which would make it a Federal offense to use wire or radio communications to defraud.

We are informed that the Commission from time to time has had called to its attention situations in which persons have used radio facilities for the perpetration or attempted perpetration of obvious frauds. In most of these cases, the station licensee is not a party to the fraud or culpable but rather is himself a victim of the fraud. In such cases, there is no basis for proceeding against the licensee. And unless the fraud scheme also involves use of the mails, there is at present no means of reaching perpetrators of such schemes. While the Federal Trade Commission has certain powers dealing with unfair methods of competition these have not proved to be fully effective in deterring such frauds.

4. Clear channels and superpower in AM broadcasting: The subcommittee believes that the most important question from a policy standpoint in the field of AM radio broadcasting is that involving so-called clear channels and the amount of power with which such stations should operate.

The subcommittee is of the opinion that a brief review of the background of this question would be helpful. There were in the United States (as of January 1, 1948) a total of 1,962 AM radio broadcast stations. These operate on 106 channels, i. e., paths through the ether. Obviously, there must be many more than a single station on one channel. To facilitate allocation the channels were divided into three classes: local, regional, and clear. There are 6 local channels which must be shared by 1,032 stations; there are 41 regional channels which must be shared by 804 stations; but there are 24 clear channels which during nighttime hours are each occupied by only 1 station through the United States. (A technicality in allocation has assigned one additional station to one of the clear channels but a class 1-B channel is maintained without duplication.) Originally, in the earlier days of broadcasting in this country, there was upward of 50 clear channels but as need for more and more stations grew, the regulatory agency began to duplicate stations on some of these channels. In short, even then the problem was whether channels should be reserved exclusively as clear or whether the country should receive more and improved radio service. The regulatory agency decided in favor of the public interest and duplicated assignments. We regard this as an important precedent and we do not understand why the Commission suddenly halted such assignments.

However, despite ever-increasing demands for more radio stations and for improved service, 24 channels remain to this day reserved for exclusive nighttime use by stations. Because the assignments on these clear channels were made in the early days of radio broadcasting, the clear-channel stations are in the best part of the radio spectrum, and have become the rich, powerful stations located in the largest and most lucrative markets. Their collective power and position is a factor in their successful resistance to any attempt to duplicate the channels they presently occupy. We cannot refrain from drawing the analogy to the dog in the manger story; radio frequencies are a scarce natural resource; additional stations are needed in many parts of the country and yet these 24 channels which would allow assignment of 75 to several hundred additional stations are reserved without duplication.

But exclusive use of a channel is only half of the story. Equally important to the fact that 24 stations have exclusive nighttime channels, is the amount of electric power with which they are authorized to broadcast. These stations broadcast with a power of 50,000 watts. The significance of this power may be realized when it is understood that a local station generally operates with a power of 250 watts and has a coverage of perhaps 10 miles in radius; regional stations operate with power varying from 1,000 to 10,000 watts and cover a radius on the average of 50 to 75 miles. Clear-channel stations, however, use power ranging from 5 to 250 times as much as any other radio station and cover an area of 175 to 200 miles in radius, although their signal may be heard under ordinary favorable conditions for upward of 500 miles. In act, the total power used by 24 clear channels is greater than the power used by all the remainder of the radio stations in the United States combined.

Thus, it may be readily understood why these clear-channel stations already provide a type of competition against which the smaller local stations experience difficulty. They attract the large national advertisers, exercise tremendous influence over vast areas far removed from the source of the transmitter, and have made fantastic returns on their investment. Only a few years ago examples of annual returns of 100 percent to 200 percent on the investment were not uncommon in radio-station operation.

Some 10 years ago a majority of these clear-channel stations formed an organization with the express purpose of securing Federal Communications Commission authority for a 10- to fifteen fold increase in power for clear-channel stations. They sought 500,000 watts to 750,000 watts instead of the 50,000 watts then and now assigned to them. Even prior to that time (in 1934) one of their number (WLW in Cincinnati) had been granted a temporary experimental license to operate with 500,000 watts. That operation brought such opposition from so many smaller stations in the Midwest which complained of monopoly and unfair competition that the Senate approved a resolution (S. Res. 294, 75th Cong.) on June 13, 1938, asserting that it was the sense of the Senate that no AM broadcast radio station in this country should be operated with power in excess of 50,000 watts. We concur in that view today, and in the absence of affirmative legislation authorizing power in excess of 50,000 watts we doubt the Commission's legal authority to grant power in excess of 50,000 watts.

A few months after the passage of the Senate resolution the Federal Communications Commission withdrew the experimental license for superpower it had granted the Cincinnati station. Since that time (1939) no radio station has operated with more than 50,000 watts. But the organization of clear-channel stations seeking superpower continued its fight both in and out of the Commission for its demands. It lobbied Members of Congress, filed petitions before the Commission, and participated in additional hearings. The advent of World War II put a temporary damper on its activities. But immediately after the war, it renewed its efforts. The Commission thereupon again conducted another hearing on the question during 1946 and 1947. By the spring of 1948, it had become an open secret in the radio industry that a decision in the clear-channel case, as the issue had come to be known, could be expected later that year. But more important, so publicly confident were members of the clear-channel association of the outcome that hundreds of smaller radio-station operators throughout the Nation became alarmed and began imploring Members of Congress to do something to prevent creation of a monopoly situation which they said would put them out of business. Educators and public figures wrote members of this committee that domination of the Nation's airways by a few high power stations (owned by 15 corporations) would be dangerous to freedom of speech.

Concerned with the situation, Senator EDWIN C. JOHNSON of Colorado introduced on February 26, 1948, a bill (S. 2231, 80th Cong.) which would provide for duplication on clear channels and limit their power to 50,000 watts. The Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the following day (February 27) instructed its acting chairman (Senator TOBEY) to write the Federal Communications Commission requesting that it defer any final action in the clear channel case until the committee had come to some conclusion on the bill. On March 5, Chairman Wayne Coy of the Commission replied to this committee advising that no action would be taken in the case pending Senate committee action.

Hearings on the Johnson bill began on the following April 5, and continued for 10 days through April 23, 1948. Seventy witnesses made personal oral statements; nearly 1,100 additional persons and companies, a substantial majority of which spoke for hundreds of radio stations, sent in statements or letters expressing their views; the final printed hearing covered nearly 1,600 pages. Members of this subcommittee attended a substantial part of the hearings and have examined the record rather closely. The subcommittee believes this hearing was one of the largest, best attended, and comprehensive held during their personal experience in the Senate.

We have cited this brief history of the clear-channel superpower question so that our summary and recommendations will be more readily understood. One other fact should be noted. In discussions of the clear-channel superpower question, reference has been made frequently to the provisions of the North American regional broadcast agreement. This is a radio treaty governing use of radio frequencies in North America to which Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, the Bahamas, and the United States are signatories. It sets standards of operation and practice for radio stations in these countries. One of its provisions is that clear-channel stations should use a minimum power of 50,000 watts. Members of the clear-channel organization who advocate superpower assert that if the United States does not authorize higher power our present clear channels will be duplicated in the other signatory countries and we will lose our clear channels. A further corollary argument is made that because a North American regional broadcast conference is to be held next September in Quebec and because the position of our Government at that conference must be circulated very shortly among the other signatories, it is necessary that the Federal Communications Commission make an immediate decision in the clear-channel superpower case. Of course, when these two arguments by the advocates of superpower are coupled, it becomes obvious that they mean that the Commission should authorize operation of clear-channel stations with power of 500,000 to 750,000 watts.

We believe that these contentions centering around the North American regional broadcasting agreement should be disposed of first. In the first place, we are firmly of the opinion that adherence to the present agreement does not require radio stations within the United States to operate with power in excess of 50,000 watts. We have studied the agreement and we assert that with respect to this point it is clear that the only requirement is that the clear channels of signatory governments operate with a minimum of 50,000 watts. That is the practice and policy within the United States today. It is implicit from the agreement that the signatory countries bind themselves by adherence to certain standards not to interfere with the signals of radio stations located in the other countries. It would be, in our opinion, an unwise policy, indeed, for this country to have agreed to a policy of radio broadcasting which is injurious to American broadcasting generally and which would not serve the general public interest. Obviously, we did not subscribe to any such policy in the existing agreement.

Secondly, we reject completely the argument that the Federal Communications Commission should render a decision forthwith in the clear-channel case so that United States policy on this question would be established for the purpose of informing the other countries now of what our position is to be at the forthcoming conference. It would be a new departure in Government, in our experience, for a regulatory agency decision involving private litigants to become binding as formulating what this country's policy should be in an international treaty. We would deplore the rendering of such a decision prior to the conference meeting as—

(1) An action designed to bypass the Congress on a basic-policy question;

(2) An action designed to bind this country's hands in advance of an international conference; and

(3) An action productive of suspicion and resentment on the part of the other signatories.

We know from conferences held with a number of representatives of other signatories that their countries do not look with favor on operation of United States radio stations with power of 500,000 to 750,000 watts. And, for our own good, we should oppose the operation of clear channels in the other countries with excessive power as being injurious to many of our own stations. Such high-power operation in Mexico at the present time already provides serious interference with stations ranging from Florida to California. We believe the United States should enter into the forthcoming conference in good faith, bound by only one basic consideration: to stand for a general policy of operation of domestic radio stations with such limited power as not to interfere with radio stations in neighboring countries. We believe that this means that the upper limit should be 50,000 watts and we are firmly of the opinion that all of the signatories would be better served by an agreement that no clear-channel station should operate with more than 50,000 watts.

If it is necessary that we should now make known to the other signatories what this country's position with respect to clear channels and superpower is to be at the Quebec

Conference, we believe they should be informed that this country's basic law does not permit operation of AM radio stations with power in excess of 50,000 watts and that in the absence of a specific statute authorizing such operation the United States proposes to operate its domestic radio stations with not more than 50,000 watts of power, that this is best suited to our internal needs and the general public interest, that such a policy will not interfere with radio-station operation by any other signatory, and that we will advocate that policy for all signatories.

Now with respect to the question of a decision by the Federal Communications Commission in the clear-channel superpower case: We are well aware of the contention that has been made, by advocates of superpower, that this case involves an engineering equation and that the regulatory body is the only proper authority to make such a decision. We reject that contention as unrealistic, bureaucratic, and not in accord with the formulation of the Communications Act and the legal precedents thereunder.

We believe that the clear-channel superpower question is a fundamental policy issue of tremendous national import to be determined by the lawmaking body and not a technical engineering problem to be decided by a regulatory agency. It must be clear, even to a layman, that were clear-channel stations authorized to broadcast with power of a half million to three-quarters of a million watts, a few stations located in large metropolitan cities would dominate radio broadcasting in this country. Not only would the overwhelming majority of smaller stations find it economically impossible to exist, but more important, radio would no longer serve local needs or have local responsibility. It has been asserted that such superpower stations are necessary to give diversified radio coverage to small, isolated communities located in the Rocky Mountains and southwestern parts of the United States which are covered by only one or two stations at present. We have heard much of these so-called white areas alleged to have little or no radio coverage. But we have yet to be convinced by a factual survey of such areas that they do not, in fact, get adequate radio coverage. The major evidence on this subject presented to the committee during the hearings on the Johnson bill were engineering diagrams and curves which purported to show by mathematical calculation that there are areas without adequate coverage. What we should like to see, and we believe that the Federal Communications Commission should want to have, is a careful, on-the-spot survey of these alleged areas to learn from radio listeners themselves what kind of radio service they receive.

We deem it essential to point out here that the most effective and available means of bringing additional AM radio service to such underserved areas is to duplicate in those areas the present clear-channel stations. There is no sound reason, either from an engineering or policy standpoint, why the same channel now occupied by a New York or Chicago or Louisville station could not also be assigned to a station located in Texas, or Arizona, or Utah, or Colorado, or Idaho, or eastern Washington to provide additional radio service to those areas. Certainly there would be no possibility of interference to the New York or other midwestern stations and greater service to more people would be brought about by a more efficient and economical distribution of frequencies and the so-called white areas would be eliminated. In fact, we suggest that under the Communications Act the Commission has a duty under the fair-and-equitable-distribution-of-facilities section to make a better and fairer assignment of frequencies than now exists; we do not believe that exclusive use of a frequency by a single licensee is in accord with the clear meaning of the law.

The important question here, however, is not so much the allegation that there are such unserved radio areas as the larger and far more vital question of what would happen to radio in the United States generally if a few already privileged stations were to be granted superpower. We believe, and we assert, that there is ample evidence that the basic objective of the Communications Act of 1934 would be subverted if a small number of stations were to secure authority to operate with more power than now authorized. The basic purpose of the law is that radio should serve the public interest and that the regulatory agency should promote a policy of competition in radio broadcasting. In our view, the language of the act with respect to the granting of licenses in the public interest, the promotion of competition in radio broadcasting, and the equitable distribution of radio frequencies is so clear that the Federal regulatory agency should (a) have continued to carry out the policy it began years ago of duplicating so-called clear channels in the interest of better use of scarce radio frequencies and not have retained pristine the 24 clear channels that remain today; and (b) have summarily rejected any application for operation of AM broadcast stations with power above 50,000 watts as one which not only would foster monopoly but which, if granted, would be in fact contrary to the clear intent of the law itself.

Your subcommittee, therefore, makes the following recommendations with respect to the clear-channel superpower question:

(a) That since the question of increasing power for operation of AM radio stations above the present limit of 50,000 watts involves a basic, fundamental policy of the highest national importance concerned with the economic and political health of the United States, it is a question which can legally be determined only by the Congress through the enactment of legislation (the Commission obviously has reversed its interpretation of the law and has abandoned its own precedents of duplicating clear channels); that such legislation should not be considered until after the North American Regional Broadcasting Conference is held; thereafter the Commission be invited to make recommendations for such legislative changes as it deems advisable with respect to these matters; and

(b) That if it is deemed essential to circulate this country's views on the clear-channel superpower question among the other signatories to the North American regional broadcast agreement prior to said Conference, the United States should declare that since the Congress has never authorized operation of domestic AM radio stations with power in excess of 50,000 watts in this country, the United States will advocate such 50,000-watt power limitation for all signatories (with each signatory having the authority to prescribe such use of its own clear channels as best serves its own listeners and the country's public interest but no signatory shall share or duplicate the clear channels heretofore assigned to any other signatory); and

(c) That the Federal Communications Commission be promptly advised of these recommendations.

5. Frequency allocation—FM radio: The problem of allocation of frequency space in the spectrum is a fundamental one. It is an authority fraught with so many consequences to development of the whole communications art that it is a pity that it is not better understood and its consequences more sharply realized.

Unfortunately, because it involves decisions based on highly technical knowledge of electronics and the application of such knowledge, the average citizen—and this includes Members of the Congress—knows little about it. Nevertheless, these so-called engineering decisions directly affect and actually control long-range policy determinations which decide not only who shall be licensees in the operation of AM radio broadcast stations, FM broadcast stations, television stations, radiotelegraph and wire telegraph common carriers, but more important, in what parts of the spectrum these various services shall operate.

Decisions of this latter kind have an important bearing on which types of service shall move ahead and which shall be retarded; in fact, which shall live and which shall die. For example, a decision in which part of the spectrum television shall operate has the effect of determining (a) that television service shall be available only to limited parts of the United States and to a limited number of people; (b) that television service will be only in black and white and not in color; (c) that developer and patent holder X shall have a preferred position over developer and patent holder Y or Z. Or, for example, a decision that certain frequencies are more suitable for television than for FM radio becomes determinative in so retarding the development of FM radio that this latter service is denied a wide use and application throughout the country.

It may be asserted that the results which flow from such decisions may not have been considered in arriving at the original decision. It is claimed that the original decision was made in good faith, based on engineering information and knowledge then available. But it is just because such decisions are based on engineering knowledge at the time, and because like all other experts, engineers may differ with respect to their findings and conclusions as well as with respect to the projection of their findings on the ultimate situation, that it is important to evaluate to what degree so-called engineering decisions should be the sine qua non of a basic determination.

Your subcommittee calls attention to a hearing held by a subcommittee of this committee in the last Congress, generally titled "Progress of FM Radio." This hearing, held during March, April, and May of 1948, sought to develop to what extent certain commercial interests in the radio industry affected and controlled engineering decisions which resulted in basic policy determinations. The hearing brought out, in the opinion of your subcommittee, that electronics is a rapidly developing and changing art; that despite the fact it is based on such exact sciences as physics and mathematics, it is still far from being an exact and positively predictable art; that reliable and able engineers differ widely; that some engineers whose opinions have been of influence in making decisions of great magnitude are not always abreast of all developments and facts in the art; that the regulatory agency has had to and does still rely on the testimony and experiences and experiments of engineers who are the employees of major commercial interests in the industry; that the regulatory agency appears to be overawed and too much impressed by such engineering views and does not always balance these views against the broad public policy of what is best for the general interest of the people of the United States.

We have made this condensed and brief summary merely to point up the basis of one of the many criticisms made of the Federal Communications Commission. We think that such censure has been deserved in the past; we trust that the procedure and approach that earned it will be removed in the future.

Meanwhile, we earnestly recommend that this committee continue its investigation into this phase of Commission and industry operations with the purpose of a complete exploration of every influence that has been exerted to bring about various decisions.

We recommend this course because only by such pitiless exposures can we hope to make certain that yet-to-be-made decisions of the greatest and most paramount importance to the American people in the field of electronics generally and radio television specifically will be really in the general public interest and not for the benefit of vested interests.

6. Censorship of radio programs: Your subcommittee deems it wise to make some reference in this report to the frequently discussed so-called censorship question. We had thought that the views of this committee, as a whole, were firmly and cogently expressed in the report on the White bill (S. Rept. 1567, 80th Cong.). There has been, however, repeated reference to Commission interpretations of the act as limiting free speech or imposing censorship on radio licensees. It is apparent to your subcommittee that a planned propaganda effort is being carried on among well-meaning but uninformed persons to secure congressional revision of the act with respect to the so-called censorship question.

It should be pointed out that the act itself contains a "no censorship" section (sec. 326) which makes clear that there can be no censorship of radio programs. The language itself is brief. It states plainly that the Commission does not have the power of censorship over radio communications and that it shall not make any rule or condition which shall interfere with the right of free speech by radio. There are no "if's," "and's," or "but's," no weasel words or hidden clauses. What has provoked certain radio interests is Commission interpretation of its licensing and licensing-renewal power (sec. 309) which declares that the Commission must determine that the granting of a license or renewal is in the public interest, convenience, and necessity. The Commission has, from time to time, exercised this latter authority by withholding or denying renewals until it determined that the licensee had operated in the public interest.

Probably no other provision of the law has been attacked in the courts more frequently and by more able legal counsel. Probably no other section of the law has been subject to more searching scrutiny by the courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States. Uniformly and without exception, the final decision has upheld the Commission's authority to determine whether or not a licensee's operation has been in the public interest. Moreover, the court decisions have held that such exercise of authority by the Commission does not invade or vitiate the "no censorship" provision of the law. When the courts have on more than one occasion spoken clearly that the Commission has the right and duty under the law to determine whether the public interest is being served and that in so doing there is no violation of free speech, we believe the final judicial interpretation has been made.

We concur, of course, completely and fully with the line of judicial decisions on this point. To us it appears ridiculous to hold that a person operating under a Federal license shall not be answerable to a constituted authority for his performance under that license. To hold otherwise would be to set at naught the license system, to make the license in fact a perpetual grant. So long as radio frequencies are scarce national resources, the Government has a right to expect and demand proper use of them.

In view of the repeated court decisions which confirm our interpretation of the act, we see no need for and recommend no legislative changes in the act in this respect.

7. Common carriers, domestic and international: Your subcommittee is seriously concerned with the problems of communications common carriers, operating both in the domestic and international fields. Since the end of the war, their revenues have suffered serious decline. The domestic wire carrier, Western Union, is engaged in a large program of modernization designed eventually to reduce operating overhead, but meanwhile faces financial difficulties. It has sought and obtained rate increases, but these do not solve the problem because they have the effect of reducing business. In addition, Western Union is in a position where it cannot exploit its cable facilities because of a provision of law which requires the company to divest itself of international operations. The international carriers are only slightly better off, financially speaking. Moreover, the international carriers must compete, not alone between themselves for business and frequencies but against Government-owned foreign communications monopolies which continue to play off United States carriers against each other for more favorable contract arrangements.

Efforts to meet some of these problems were undertaken by this committee before the war. An investigation was held, hearings and conferences undertaken; an effort to formulate a national policy was pushed. The war intervened. However, these earlier actions were not wholly fruitless. In the past year a great deal of attention has been given to the formulation of a national communications policy which would be based on substantive legislation. Representatives of the State Department, the Federal Communications Commission, the various military services, and other Government users of communications are giving serious and continuing attention to this entire situation.

We recommend that this committee continue the study of telecommunications common carriers in the Eighty-first Congress with the purpose of formulating legislative proposals to cope with the problem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I also want to take this opportunity, as the chairman of the committee, to commend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], members of the subcommittee, for their excellent work. I am very much interested in one of the points raised by the subcommittee, the issue of superpower and clear-channel broadcasting. It is a subject on which extensive hearings were held in the last Congress. I hope every Member of the Senate will read the report carefully because it deals realistically not only with the question of monopoly control of the physical broadcasting plant of America, but with the much more important issue—the centralization of power in a few hands to sway public opinion.

Furthermore, the committee report raises the important legal question of whether a fundamental policy matter which directly concerns and affects all the people of the United States shall be decided by an administrative regulatory agency created by Congress for that function or whether such a paramount question of important national policy should be determined by the Congress itself. I believe, and I am sure all Senators believe, that basic, fundamental policy questions must be determined by the lawmaking body.

We are all aware that the trend during recent years has been for the regulatory agencies to arrogate more and more power to themselves; to interpret language of the laws under which they operate so broadly as to give them authority never contemplated by the Congress. I, for one, am opposed to this practice and intend to oppose it as vigorously as I know how.

The report, which I believe should be in the RECORD so that all Members may read it, asserts unequivocally that the Federal Communications Commission does not have the legal authority under the Communications Act of 1934, to grant licenses for the operation of superpower radio stations because such operation would be contrary to the clear intent of the law which says that station licenses may be granted only in the public interest and that the regulatory agency must promote competition in broadcasting.

It is not my purpose here to quote from the report but I want it distinctly understood that I personally commend fully and endorse completely the viewpoint expressed by the subcommittee with respect to superpower and clear-channel operation of radio stations.

REPORT ON PROGRESS OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION (S. REPT. NO. 13)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation, I should like to say just a word about the committee's Report on Progress of the Economic Cooperation Administration, which I have just submitted.

This committee was established last April by section 124 of Public Law 472—the law which set up the Economic Cooperation Administration. The committee's duties were set forth in section 124, as follows:

> It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of the programs of United States economic assistance to foreign countries and to review the progress achieved in the execution and administration of such programs * * * and it shall make a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, from time to time, concerning the results of its studies, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable.

Throughout its 10 months of existence, this committee, assisted by a well-qualified staff, has endeavored to act in close accordance with both the letter and spirit of the section I have just quoted. That is, we have directed our efforts toward determining facts, and from those facts we have analyzed the working out of the foreign-aid programs.

Under the direction of the committee, the staff has maintained close daily contact with officials of the Economic Cooperation Administration here in Washington. In addition, several members of both the committee and its staff have made trips to Europe and China to see at first hand how the program is going in the participating nations.

This report, then, is one of the results of 10 months of continuous study and analysis of this country's foreign-aid programs—and I think that the adoption of the report by unanimous vote of the committee is a good indication of the success we have had in carrying out the job in the manner in which the Congress intended we should when it set up the committee last April.

Now a word about the report itself. First, I would like to remind you that this Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation is not a legislative committee—it is a watchdog committee, and, in fact, that is the name by which it is popularly known. Therefore, you will not find in the report any firm recommendations as to what should or should not be done by Congress in connection with forthcoming legislation on United States foreign-aid programs. In fact, most of the report consists of a section called a checklist, which gives pertinent information on what has been done by the Economic Cooperation Administration and the participating nations to implement and comply with Public Laws 472 and 793.

However, as a result of its studies, the committee believes that there are certain portions of our foreign-aid programs which need either clarification or strengthening and, in addition, that certain problems are sure to arise which would cause serious trouble if we did not anticipate them now. For that reason, I would like to invite special attention to the first section of our report. This section is entitled "Problems Requiring Consideration by Congress." It outlines 10 different problems and briefly discusses the pros and cons of various possible solutions to those problems. For example, this first section of the report discusses the following:

First. German reparations—whether or not it would be desirable to require that participating nations agree, as a condition for receiving further United States aid, to reduce the number of German plants that are to be dismantled.

Second. Strategic materials—whether or not ECA should be given increased responsibility for arranging with participating nations for development and future delivery to the United States of strategic materials needed by this country.

Third. Grants versus loans—whether or not it would be better to provide all further aid on a grant basis until participating nations become reasonable credit risks.

Fourth. Shipping—whether or not Congress should require unequivocably that at least one-half of the gross tonnage of goods sent to participating nations from the United States be transported on United States flag vessels.

Finally, I wish to commend this report to Members of the Congress as a valuable source of information and guidance in connection with the forthcoming hearings and floor discussion concerning United States economic aid to foreign nations. It is the labor of a committee which has functioned well and harmoniously, and I believe that as long as the Congress has a watchdog of this type it can rest easier concerning the operation and administration of whatever foreign aid it continues to make available.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, and withdrawing a nomination, which nominations were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

James M. Mitchell, of Illinois, to be a Civil Service Commissioner.

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Paul P. Rao, of New York, to be judge of the United States Customs Court;

James T. Foley, of New York, to be United States district judge for the northern district of New York, vice Edward S. Kampf;

Samuel Hamilton Kaufman, of New York, to be United States district judge for the southern district of New York;

William T. McCarthy, of Massachusetts, to be United States district judge for the district of Massachusetts, vice Arthur D. Healey;

Angel R. de Jesus, of Puerto Rico, to be chief justice of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico;

Luis Negron Fernandez, of Puerto Rico, to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico;

Gerald A. Gleeson, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania;

Cleon A. Summers, of Oklahoma, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma;

John B. Tansil, of Montana, to be United States attorney for the district of Montana;

Carl H. Fleckenstine, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Pennsylvania;

Harold K. Claypool, of Ohio, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Ohio; and Frederick Elliott Biermann, of Iowa, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Iowa.

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Hon. F. Ryan Duffy, of Wisconsin, to be circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, vice Evan A. Evans, deceased.

By Mr. BROUGHTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Wilson Warlick, of North Carolina, to be United States district judge for the western district of North Carolina, vice Edwin Y. Webb, retired.

By Mr. DONNELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Roy W. Harper, of Missouri, to be United States district judge for the eastern and western districts of Missouri.

By Mr. FERGUSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Thomas Patrick Thornton, of Michigan, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Michigan, vice Ernest A. O'Brien, deceased;

Joseph F. Deeb, of Michigan, to be United States attorney for the western district of Michigan; and Edwin D. Bolger, of Michigan, to be United States marshal for the western district of Michigan.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Maurice J. Tobin, of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of Labor, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

Ralph Wright, of New York, as Assistant Secretary of Labor, United States Department of Labor;

Frank P. Douglass, of Oklahoma, to be a member of the National Mediation Board for the term expiring February 1, 1952 (reappointment);

John M. Houston, of Kansas, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for a term of 5 years from August 27, 1948, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate (reappointment);

Reuben F. Reider, and sundry other candidates for promotion in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service;

Abraham Walfthal, and sundry other candidates for appointment and promotion in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service; and Charles L. Newberry, and sundry other candidates for appointment and promotion in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM E. WILLETT—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have placed on the calendar the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency reporting favorably the nomination of William E. Willett, of Maryland, to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a term expiring June 30, 1950, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

I should add that the nomination was unanimously reported out by the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NOMINATION OF PRESTON DELANO

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have the honor to report the nomination of Mr. Preston Delano to be Comptroller of the Currency. I ask that the nomination, which has been favorably acted upon by the committee, be confirmed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia has submitted a report on a nomination from the Committee on Banking and Currency. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the nomination, or does he submit the report for the calendar?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I should prefer to ask for the present consideration of the report, if it is in order to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nomination just reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency be considered by the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator from Virginia state his request again? I could not clearly hear what the Senator said. What is the nomination the Senator referred to, with respect to which he asks action by the Senate?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Preston Delano, who for 10 years has most acceptably served as Comptroller of the Currency, has now been nominated for a new term of 5 years. The nomination has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now consider the nomination, and that it be confirmed.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator state why it is necessary to suspend the rules and proceed by unanimous consent? Why could not the nomination be properly acted upon at the next session of the Senate, in order that we might maintain the regularity of procedure with respect to action upon nominations?

Mr. ROBERTSON. If there is any objection, Mr. President, I shall withdraw my request. I did not think the nomination would be contested or debated. Mr. Delano is serving an interim term. It is not a material point, however, and if there is objection——

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I know of no objection, but, as a question of policy, I believe it would be better to let the nomination go over.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia withdraws his request. The nomination will go to the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KILGORE:

S. 649. A bill to increase the mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees for use of privately owned vehicles and to increase the per diem allowances of civilian officers and employees while traveling on official business; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

S. 650. A bill for the relief of Toshiko Ozawa;

S. 651. A bill for the relief of the Fisher Brewing Company, Salt Lake City, Utah; and

S. 652. A bill for the relief of Sadae Aoki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. THOMAS of Utah also introduced Senate bill 653, to provide for the amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MORSE:

S. 654. A bill for the relief of Klara Ungar Klajn; and

S. 655. A bill for the relief of Carl Nygren; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 656. A bill to coordinate the educational functions of the Federal Government in a single agency; to define its organization, powers, and duties; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 657. A bill to extend the period of validity of the act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States; and

S. 658. A bill for the relief of Adolf Max Schmitz; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 659. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research and investigation as to the cause, prevention, treatment, and possible cure of epilepsy; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

S. 660. A bill to amend the act of June 27, 1944, Public Law 359, and to preserve the equities of permanent classified civil-service employees of the United States; and

S. 661. A bill for postal employees' longevity; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 662. A bill authorizing the Wyandotte Tribe of Oklahoma to sell tribal cemetery; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

(Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma also introduced Senate bill 663, to provide for an adequate national reserve of agricultural commodities and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. KNOWLAND:

S. 664. A bill for the relief of Kihei Matsuo; and

S. 665. A bill for the relief of Margaret D. Scott and Lydia M. Scott; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. KNOWLAND also introduced Senate bill 666, to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 to provide for the admission into the United States of certain persons of Russian origin residing in China, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. LODGE:

S. 667. A bill for the relief of the Shelby Shoe Co., of Salem, Mass.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. IVES:

S. 668. A bill for the relief of Giovanna Parisi, Michelina Valletta, Yolanda Altieri, Generosa Tamburi, Carolina Picciano, and Giovanna Turtur;

S. 669. A bill to permit certain displaced persons under 16 years of age orphaned as a result of World War II to enter the United States as nonquota immigrants; and

S. 670. A bill to incorporate the Gold Star Society of American War Widows and Orphans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. IVES (for himself and Mr. WAGNER):

S. 671. A bill to authorize the conveyance of a portion of the United States military reservation at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., to the State of New York for use as a maritime school, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

(Mr. HENDRICKSON introduced Senate bill 672, to amend part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) so as to provide entitlement to educational benefits for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted prior to October 6, 1945, on a same basis as for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted within 1 year after October 6, 1945, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 673. A bill relating to the pay and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve performing active duty in the grade of rear admiral, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 674. A bill to incorporate the Twenty-ninth Division Association; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCARRAN (by request):

S. 675. A bill for the relief of certain consultants formerly employed by the Technical Industrial Intelligence Committee of the Foreign Economic Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 676. A bill granting a renewal of patent No. 92,187 relating to the badge of the Sons of the American Legion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. WILEY also introduced Senate bill 677, to encourage employment of veterans with pensionable or compensable service-connected disabilities through Federal reimbursement to any employer, insurer, or fund, of amounts of workmen's compensation paid on account of disability or death arising out of such employment, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 678 (by request). A bill to extend to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey the provisions of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 679. A bill to establish a Bureau of Coal Mines Inspection in the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

S. 680. A bill for the relief of James E. Dick; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 681. A bill to amend an act entitled "An Act to Provide a Government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

S. 682. A bill for the relief of John B. Boyle; and

S. 683. A bill to relieve certain employees of the Veterans' Administration from financial liability for certain overpayments.

(Mr. McCARRAN also introduced Senate bill 684, to improve the administration of justice by the creation of an Administrative Court of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. SPARKMAN introduced Senate bill 685, to provide assistance to farmers in securing farm housing and other farm buildings, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. SPARKMAN also introduced Senate bill 686, to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, in order to assure the availability of low-cost financing on liberal terms to World War II veterans who need homes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina (for himself and Mr. MAYBANK):

S. 687. A bill to establish a Cowpens Battleground National Military Park; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. O'CONOR:

S. 688. A bill to provide for a decennial census of housing; and

S. 689. A bill to permit certain postal employees or substitute postal employees to receive credit for military service; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. McFARLAND (for himself and Mr. HAYDEN):

S. 690. A bill to authorize the furnishing of water to the Yuma auxiliary project, Arizona, through the works of the Gila project, Arizona, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McFARLAND (for himself, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. CHAVEZ, and Mr. ANDERSON):

S. 691. A bill relating to the amount of Federal payments to the States under the Social Security Act with respect to State payments to Indian wards of the United States of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. NEELY (by request):

S. 692. A bill to provide for a grant to the Prisoners Relief Society for use in the rehabilitation of chronic alcoholics; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOWNEY:

S. 693. A bill to authorize Sacramento Valley irrigation canals, Central Valley project, California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs

By Mr. TAYLOR:

S. 694. A bill to repeal the Philippine Trade Act of 1946; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 695. A bill authorizing the construction of certain works of improvement near Kooskia, Idaho, in the interest of flood control and allied purposes; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 696. A bill to provide additional compensation in lieu of allowances for retired enlisted personnel of the armed services; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 697. A bill for the relief of Grover Crosbie; and

S. 698. A bill for the relief of Rhode Chang; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 699. A bill to provide for the restoration of certain lands occupied by the United States under war powers to the owners thereof; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

S. 700. A bill to authorize the issuance of a license to practice osteopathy in the District of Columbia to Maria G. Waksmundzha; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 701. A bill to increase the mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees for use of privately owned vehicles; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

S. 702. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to provide for crediting certain service performed in the employ of carriers under Federal control during World War I; and

S. 703. A bill to permit the mailing of correspondence course lessons at the rates of third- and fourth-class matter; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

(Mr. PEPPER also introduced Senate bill 704, to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the leprosy situation in the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. MURRAY):

S. 705. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to support research and training in diseases of arthritis and rheumatism, and to aid the States in the development of community programs for the control of these diseases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. MORSE):

S. 706. A bill providing equal pay for equal work for women, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. GREEN):

S. J. Res. 42. Joint resolution granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bill and joint resolution of the House of Representatives were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H. R. 1252. An act to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 with respect to the eligibility for appointment in the executive branch of the Government of former professional staff members of committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me, together with a comparison of the bill with a former bill, and a sectional analysis thereof be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement, together with the summary and the analysis, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 653) to provide for the amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement, summary, and analysis of the bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

I have today introduced a bill to provide for the amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and for other purposes. During the present session of the Congress I have introduced two bills which would provide amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act. The first bill, S. 248, was introduced on behalf of myself, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. WAGNER and was identical with a bill introduced during the Eightieth Congress, on which hearings were held by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, S. 2062. I also introduced this year S. 336, which would clarify the overtime compensation provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act as applied in the stevedoring and building-construction industries. I am now introducing a bill which provides a general revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act. This bill includes substantially all of the amendments which were contained in S. 2062, Eightieth Congress, as reintroduced as S. 248 of this Congress as well as the provisions of S. 336. In addition, however, it includes a number of other amendments and improvements of the law which have been recommended by the President in his state of the Union message and by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division in his annual report to the Congress.

I have had prepared a comparison between the Thomas bill (S. 2062, 80th Cong.; S. 248, 81st Cong.) and the bill which I am introducing today. I have asked unanimous consent that this comparison be printed in the body of the RECORD immediately following my remarks. I have also had prepared a sectional analysis of the bill which I am introducing today. I have asked unanimous consent that this sectional analysis be printed in the body of the RECORD immediately following the comparison referred to above.

It is my intention that the various bills on this subject, including the bill I have introduced today, shall receive early consideration by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

COMPARISON BETWEEN THE THOMAS BILL (S. 2062, 80TH CONG.; S. 248, 81ST CONG.) AND BILL TO REVISE THE WAGE AND HOUR LAW

Comparison between the Thomas bill (S. 2062, 80th Cong.; S. 248, 81st Cong.) and the attached draft is as follows:

COVERAGE

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft expand coverage by bringing within the scope of the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the act employees engaged in or about an enterprise affecting commerce.

The Thomas bill strengthens the child-labor provisions by imposing a direct prohibition on the employment of oppressive child labor in or about any establishment where an employer is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. The attached draft contains stronger provisions by directly prohibiting the employment of child labor (1) in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, and (2) in or about an enterprise affecting commerce.

MINIMUM WAGES

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft raise the minimum hourly rate to 75 cents an hour. This may be raised up to $1 by the industry committee procedure. The attached draft would also permit rates to be lowered, but not below 75 cents an hour, where necessary to prevent substantial curtailment of employment due to a general business recession.

MAXIMUM HOURS

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft provide for payment of time and one-half the regular rate of pay for all hours worked in excess of 40 per week. The attached draft also defines the term "regular rate," which is not defined in the Thomas bill.

EXEMPTIONS FROM BOTH WAGE AND HOUR PROVISIONS

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft continue the complete wage and hour exemption with respect to any employee engaged in an executive, professional, administrative, or outside salesman capacity and for retail or servicing establishments. In both bills the 50-percent interstate commerce test as to retail or service establishments has been dropped and chain stores and large department stores are placed outside the exemption.

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft continue the complete wage and hour exemption as to employees employed as fishermen but eliminate this exemption as to employees engaged in fish processing. The attached draft, however, would provide a 14-week seasonal exemption, where justified, for the fish-processing industry.

The attached draft continues the complete wage and hour exemption as to employees engaged in agriculture. The Thomas bill limits this exemption to nonindustrialized farms.

The attached draft retains the complete exemption from the wage and hour provisions of the act as to certain classes of switchboard operators. The Thomas bill eliminates this exemption.

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft eliminate the complete wage and hour exemption with respect to employees engaged in processing agricultural commodities. Under the attached draft, however, agricultural processing may be given a 14-workweek seasonal exemption, where justified.

EXEMPTIONS FROM OVERTIME

Both the Thomas bill and the attached draft narrow the present overtime exemption as to certain classes of motor-carrier employees. The attached draft would, however, more narrowly restrict the exemption so that it would only apply to drivers and drivers' helpers in over-the-road transport operations.

The Thomas bill continues the complete exemption from the overtime provision of the act with respect to railroad employees. The attached draft, however, limits this exemption to employees who travel with the train between terminal points.

The Thomas bill continues the complete exemption from the overtime provisions of the act of all employees of air lines. The attached draft limits the exemption to flight personnel.

The Thomas bill eliminates the minimum wage and overtime exemptions as to seamen. The attached draft continues the overtime exemption as to seamen but would apply the minimum wage provisions.

CHILD-LABOR EXEMPTIONS

The attached draft exempts from the child-labor provisions children employed in retail or service establishments other than chain stores and large department stores. The child-labor provisions are also made inapplicable to employees engaged in agriculture outside of school hours as well as to newsboys. The Thomas bill, which covered child labor less broadly, did not contain either the retail or service establishment exemption or the exemption for newsboys. It does contain the agriculture exemption "while not legally required to attend school," as in the present act.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

1. Secretary of Labor made responsible for administration: The attached draft would place administration of all provisions of the act under the Secretary of Labor, at the same time preserving the Administrator as an officer of the Department of Labor appointed by the President. The Thomas bill makes no provision of this nature.

2. Rule-making power: The attached draft authorizes the Secretary of Labor to make regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of the act whereas the Thomas bill contains no similar provision.

3. Restitution of back wages: The attached draft provides for collection by the Secretary of Labor of back wages and overtime pay due employees and enables suits for this purpose, whereas the Thomas bill contains no similar provision.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF BILL TO REVISE WAGE AND HOUR LAW

Section 1.—Contains the enacting clause and short title.

Section 2.—Amends the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 as follows:

Section 1. Changes title of act to Fair Labor Standards Act of 1949.

Section 2 (a). Broadens findings in original act to make them applicable to industries engaged in activities affecting commerce, in addition to industries engaged in commerce or in production of goods for commerce.

Section 2 (b). Clarifies policy section of original act by referring to the exercise of congressional power over commerce with foreign nations as well as among the several States. This is appropriate in connection with the extension of the minimum-wage provisions to American seamen.

Section 3 (a). Definition of "person." No change.

Section 3 (b). Definition of "commerce." Amended to cover incoming in-bound in addition to out-bound foreign commerce. This makes possible full minimum wage coverage of American seamen.

Section 3 (c). Definition of "State." No change.

Section 3 (d). Definition of "employer." No change.

Section 3 (e). Definition of "employee." No change.

Section 3 (f). Definition of "agriculture." No change.

Section 3 (g). Definition of "employ." No change.

Section 3 (h). Definition of "industry." No change.

Section 3 (i). Definition of "goods." No change.

Section 3 (j). Definition of "produced." No change.

Section 3 (k). Definition of "sale." No change.

Section 3 (l). Definition of "oppressive child labor." Amended to close loophole in present act under which a parent may employ a child under 16 in a hazardous occupation although he could not employ the child in the same occupation if the child was 16 or 17 years of age.

Section 3 (m). Definition of "wage." Amended to provide minimum wages free and clear for seamen and for meal-service employees on common carriers, without deductions for board, lodging, or other facilities.

Section 3 (n). New subsection defining "activities affecting commerce."

Section 4 (a). Amends existing law to place administration of the act under the direction and control of the Secretary of Labor, and provides for continuation of the Wage and Hour Division as the Bureau of Wages and Hours, headed by an Administrator appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Section 4 (b). Technical changes made in existing provisions regarding agency personnel in order to conform to revised provisions of section 4 (a).

Section 4 (c). New subsection. Gives Secretary of Labor power to define terms and make other regulations or orders necessary to effective administration of the act. Provides protection from liability for employers conforming in good faith to such regulations or orders.

Section 4 (d). Conforms section 4 (c) of the present law (relating to place of exercise of agency powers) to amended language in section 4 (a).

Section 4 (e). Transfers the duty of making an annual report to Congress from the Administrator to the Secretary of Labor.

Section 5 (a)–(e). Amends existing law regarding the appointment and functions of industry committees to reflect the extension of coverage to industries affecting commerce. Technical changes made to conform the section to the amendments placing responsibility in the Secretary of Labor. Last paragraph of subsection (e) of the present act deleted as obsolete.

Section 6 (a)–(c). Amended to increase minimum wage to $0.75 an hour (and up to $1 an hour on recommendation of industry committees), and to extend coverage to employees of employers engaged in activities affecting commerce. Provision relating to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands amended to preserve existing wage orders in these islands until superseded, and to adapt the coverage of such orders to the broadened coverage provided by the amendments. Paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (a) and subsection (b) deleted as obsolete. Paragraph (5) of the present subsection (a) reenacted as paragraph (2) of that subsection, unchanged except by substitution of the Secretary of Labor for the Administrator.

Section 7 (a). Amended to extend coverage of the overtime provisions to employees of employers engaged in activities affecting commerce. Obsolete provisions of subsections (1) and (2) deleted.

Section 7 (b). Partial exemptions from overtime provisions made applicable up to 10 hours (instead of 12) in any workday or 50 hours (instead of 56) in any workweek. The specific exemptions in this subsection are amended as follows:

Paragraph (1). Exemption unchanged except for substitution of 1,040 hours for 1,000 hours as the contract period.

Paragraph (2). Provisions of existing law modified to encourage greater use of guaranteed annual employment premiums.

Paragraph (3). Exemption for seasonal industries expanded to care for peak-load overtime needs of industries for which exemptions now contained in sections 7 (c), 13 (a) (5), and 13 (a) (10) are eliminated.

Section 7 (c). Present exemption provision deleted (see sec. 7 (b) (3) above) and new subsection substituted. The new subsection (c) prevents evasion of the overtime requirements by use of so-called guaranty or Belo plans which fail to provide a genuine increase in compensation for an employee who works overtime, in accordance with the number of overtime hours worked.

Section 7 (d). Present subsection deleted as obsolete and new subsection defining and delimiting the term "regular rate" substituted. Makes clear that sums which are not compensation for hours worked and sums paid as overtime compensation are excluded from the regular rate. Meets the so-called overtime on overtime problem.

Section 7 (e). New provision. Permits overtime payments at time and one-half the applicable piece or job rate under appropriate safeguards.

Section 7 (f). New provision. Provides that certain premium compensation for overtime work pursuant to contract or practice may be credited toward statutory overtime compensation due.

Section 8. Subsection (e) deleted as obsolete and remaining provisions relating to wage orders revised to provide for establishment of minimum wage rates between 75 cents and $1 per hour through the action of industry committees and the Secretary of Labor. Wage order coverage expanded to include industries engaged in activities affecting commerce. A new subsection (f) provides for reduction of minimum wage rates set by wage orders down to, but not below, the statutory minimum of 75 cents per hour, when necessary to prevent substantial curtailment of employment in the industry due to a general recession of business activities.

Section 9. Attendance of witnesses. No change except substitution of the Secretary of Labor for the Administrator.

Section 10. Court review. No change except for substitution of the Secretary of Labor for the Administrator.

Section 11 (a). Investigations. Amended. Substitutes Secretary of Labor for Administrator. Authorizes Secretary of Labor to make investigations of employment of minors. Eliminates provision authorizing Administrator to utilize the bureaus and divisions of the Department of Labor for investigations. This provision unnecessary.

Section 11 (b)-(c). No change except substitution of Secretary of Labor for Administrator.

Section 12 (a). Child-labor provisions. Technical change with respect to effective date.

Section 12 (b). New subsection. Prohibits employment of oppressive child labor in commerce, in the production of goods for commerce, and in or about an enterprise affecting commerce. Present subsection authorizing Secretary of Labor to make investigations with respect to employment of minors deleted as such authority is now contained in section 11 (a).

Section 13 (a). New subsection. This subsection supplants the present subsection 13 (a) (2) which exempts from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the act any employee employed in any retail or service establishment the greater part of whose selling or servicing is in intrastate commerce. The new subsection exempts from the minimum wage, overtime, and child-labor provisions of the act any employee of an employer operating a retail or service establishment which derives 75 percent or more of its receipts from "retail selling or service" as such phrase is defined in this subsection, provided that the employer has neither more than four such establishments nor a total annual volume of sales or servicing of more than $500,000. Sales to farmers for ordinary farming use would generally meet the definition of "retail selling or servicing" as more specifically defined in this subsection.

Section 13 (b). Amends section 13 (a) and continues the present minimum wage and overtime exemptions with respect to certain classes of employees but with some exceptions and modifications, namely:

Paragraph (1). Amends subsection 13 (a) (1) by deleting words "local retailing." The exemption with respect to employees employed in bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacities is continued.

Present subsection 13 (a) (2) is deleted, being superseded by subsection 13 (a), supra.

Present subsection 13 (a) (3) with respect to seamen is deleted. A new subsection exempts seamen from the overtime provisions only. (Sec. 13 (c) (4), infra.)

Present subsection 13 (a) (4) exemption with respect to employees of carriers by air is deleted. A new subsection exempts flight personnel employed on an aircraft from the overtime provisions only. (Sec. 13 (c) (a), infra.)

Paragraph (2). Amends subsection 13 (a) (5)—catching, harvesting, etc., of various aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life—by incorporating certain technical changes and by deleting that portion of this subsection which extends the exemption to processing and other on-shore occupations.

Paragraph (3). Exemption for any employee employed in agriculture. No change from subsection 13 (a) (6).

Paragraph (4). Exemption for employees affected by regulations or orders of the Secretary of Labor issued under section 14. No change from present subsection 13 (a) (7) except substitution of Secretary of Labor for Administrator.

Paragraph (5). Exemption for employee employed on certain weekly and semiweekly papers. No change from present subsection 13 (a) (8).

Paragraph (6). Exemption for employees of local trolley and motor-bus carriers and other metropolitan carriers. No change from present subsection 13 (a) (9).

Present subsection 13 (a) (10)—"area of production" exception with respect to certain operations on agricultural products—is deleted. Exemption for seasonal industries expanded to take care of peak-load overtime needs now contained in subsection 7 (b) (3), supra.

Paragraph (7). New subsection. Present provision with respect to switchboard operators (sec. 13 (a) (11)) deleted. Exemption for switchboard operators provided for exchanges having only one operator on duty at a time.

Paragraph (8). New subsection. Exempts employees of employers engaged in business of operating taxicabs.

Section 13 (c). Amends present subsection 13 (b). Exempts from the overtime provisions of the act the following classes of employees.

Paragraph (1). New subsection. Narrows overtime exemption to drivers and helpers who spend greater part of the workweek in over-the-road transport operations. Present subsection 13 (b) (1) deleted.

Paragraph (2). New subsection. Narrows overtime exemption with respect to railroad employees to employees employed on line-of-road trains. Present subsection 13 (b) (2) deleted.

Paragraph (3). New subsection. Grants overtime exemption for air carrier employees if employed on an aircraft. Supersedes the present minimum wage and overtime exemption with respect to any employee of a carrier by air. (Subsec. 13 (a) (4), supra.)

Paragraph (4). New subsection. Grants overtime exemption to any employee as seaman. Supersedes the present minimum wage and overtime exemption for seamen. (Subsecs. 13 (a) (3), supra.)

Section 13 (d). Amends present subsection 13 (b) (3). Makes child-labor provisions inapplicable to newsboys. Incorporates clarifying language permitting employment, outside of school hours, of children employed in agriculture.

Section 14. Learners. No change except substitution of Secretary of Labor for Administrator.

Section 15 (a). Prohibited acts. Technical change with respect to effective date. Substitution of Secretary of Labor for Administrator. Amendment to section prohibits violation of rules and regulations issued by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to section 4 (c).

Section 15 (b). No change.

Section 16 (a). Penalties. No change.

Section 16 (b). No change.

Section 16 (c). New subsection. Authorizes Secretary of Labor to collect unpaid wages on behalf of employees which, if accepted by employee, constitute a waiver of his right to sue for such back wages, liquidated damages, court costs, and attorneys' fees. Upon request by and with the consent of the employee, the Secretary of Labor is authorized to sue to recover on behalf of the employee the actual amount of back wages due him, the right to liquidated damages being likewise waived. This subsection is in no way to affect or limit the right with respect to injunctive actions.

Section 17. Injunctive proceedings. Technical change only.

Section 18. Relation to other laws. No change.

Section 19. Separability of provisions. No change.

Section 3.—Amends the Portal to Portal Act of 1947 as follows:

Section 3 (a). Amends sections 6 (a) and 6 (b) by substituting a 4-year statute of limitations for the present 2-year period.

Section 3 (b). Transfers the present functions and duties vested in the Administrator by section 10—reliance on regulations, orders, rulings, etc.—from the Administrator to the Secretary of Labor.

Section 4.—Effective date of certain changes.

Section 4 (a). Act is to become effective 120 days after its enactment except that the Secretary of Labor may immediately exercise the functions vested in him and except that the overtime provisions of the act become effective immediately after the date of enactment.

Section 4 (b). The orders, rulings, and interpretations of the Administrator are to remain effective until amended, modified, or rescinded by the Secretary of Labor.

Section 4 (c). Provides a limitation of 4 years for claims accruing prior to enactment of this act.

NATIONAL RESERVE OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide an adequate national reserve of agricultural products, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with an explanatory statement thereof prepared by me be printed in the RECORD, immediately following the text of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Oklahoma, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 663) to provide for an adequate national reserve of agricultural commodities and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Farm Commodity Reserve Act."

TITLE I—STORAGE FACILITIES

SURVEY OF EXISTING FACILITIES AND REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 101. The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter called the Secretary) shall, through the Commodity Credit Corporation and other means available to him, as expeditiously as may be possible, make a complete survey of (1) warehouses, elevators, and other facilities available in the United States for the storage of agricultural commodities and their products, including surplus storage facilities located at any Army or Navy camp, airfield, depot, or manufacturing plant; and (2) the requirements of the various areas of the United States for additional facilities for such storage. Upon completion of such survey the Secretary shall report his findings and recommendations to Congress, specifying the areas in which such storage facilities are inadequate and the kind and quantity of storage facilities required.

CONSTRUCTION OF STORAGE FACILITIES

SEC. 102. The Secretary is authorized, through the Commodity Credit Corporation and other means available to him, upon completion of the survey and report provided for by this Act, to make additional facilities for the storage of agricultural commodities and their products available in such areas of the United States as he may deem advisable by (1) encouraging, through loans, subsidies, lease-agreements, guaranties, or otherwise, the construction or operation of such facilities by producers, cooperatives, or others; or (2) constructing or operating such facilities where suitable arrangements for their construction or operation by others cannot be made. Storage facilities constructed or operated with assistance provided for by this section shall be maintained and operated pursuant to such rules and regulations as may be issued by the Secretary from time to time; but no such rule or regulation shall become effective until after sixty days' public notice.

ACQUISITION OF STORAGE FACILITIES BY COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

SEC. 103. Section 4 (h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: "The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business; but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein, except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business, and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interest of the Corporation."

TITLE II—FARM COMMODITY RESERVES

RESERVES

SEC. 201. The Commodity Credit Corporation shall, through its price-support operations, acquire a reserve of corn in the amount of six hundred million bushels, a reserve of wheat in the amount of four hundred million bushels, and a reserve of cotton in the amount of four million five hundred thousand running bales. The Corporation shall not sell or dispose of any corn, wheat, or cotton acquired through its price-support operations if, after such sale, the reserve of such commodity will be lower than the amount specified for such commodity in this section, except that—

(1) if the Secretary determines that the national security or welfare so require, the Corporation shall sell such commodity at the lesser of (A) a price determined on a pricing basis for its stocks of such commodity on hand, which makes due allowance for grade, type, quality, location, and other factors and which is reasonably calculated to reimburse it for costs incurred by it with respect to such stocks, or (B) the parity price of such commodity;

(2) the Corporation may sell or otherwise dispose of any such commodity which has substantially deteriorated in quality, but shall immediately thereafter acquire an equal quantity of such commodity; and

(3) the Corporation may exchange any such commodity pursuant to the Act entitled "An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad", approved August 11, 1939.

The amount of corn, wheat, and cotton in the reserves provided for by this section shall not be considered in the computation of "total supply" for the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, or any other computation or determination with respect to acreage allotments, marketing quotas, or price-support levels.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

QUOTAS—1949 ACREAGE

SEC. 301. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, or of any other law, State, county, and farm acreage allotments for corn, wheat, cotton, and rice for any year after 1949 shall be computed and apportioned without regard to acreage planted, or to yields, in 1949. The acreage planted, and yields for the year next preceding the earliest year which, but for this section, would be used in such computation or apportionment shall be used in lieu of the acreage planted and yields in 1949 in such computation or apportionment.

PROHIBITION ON PRICE SUPPORT AFTER ADVERSE REFERENDUM

SEC. 302. Section 302 (b) (3) (B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (as amended by the Agricultural Act of 1948, to be effective January 1, 1950) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) no price support shall be required to be made available for any basic agricultural commodity normally marketed in any marketing year with respect to which marketing quotas for such commodity have been disapproved by producers."

EXCHANGE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES FOR STRATEGIC MATERIALS

SEC. 303. The act entitled "An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad," approved August 11, 1939, is amended to read as follows: "That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities in its reserves; and for the purpose of such exchange the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, acting jointly through the agency of the Munitions Board in the National Defense Establishment and in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior and other departments and agencies shall determine which materials are strategic and critical and the quantity and quality of such materials to be accepted. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to procure, convey, transport, handle, store, maintain, or rotate such reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials, as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act.

"Such reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials shall be stored on military or naval reservations or in other locations approved by the Secretary of Defense. The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to transfer such reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve, to any other governmental agency. When necessary to prevent deterioration, the Commodity Credit Corporation or other governmental agency is authorized to replace those quantities of the reserve stocks of such strategic and critical materials subject to deterioration with equivalent quantities of the same materials. The funds now or hereafter made available to the Commodity Credit Corporation are hereby made available to carry out the purposes of this act. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be required to carry out the provisions of this act. All funds for carrying out the provisions of this act shall be available for allotment to bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture, and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal Government as the Secretary of Agriculture may request to cooperate or assist in carrying out the provisions of this act."

The statement presented by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA

I am introducing a bill to provide for an adequate national reserve of agricultural commodities, and for other purposes. The bill, if enacted into law, is to be known as the Farm Commodity Reserve Act.

The first section of the bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make a Nation-wide survey to ascertain the extent to which storage space is available for warehousing farm commodities.

The second section provides that after full information is had as to what we have in the way of storage space the Secretary is authorized to procure additional storage space, if necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act, at points where acceptable storage space does not exist.

Such additional storage for farm commodities is to be secured through loans, subsidies, lease agreements, guaranties, or otherwise, to the end that farmers may have the opportunity of placing their surplus crops in acceptable storage in connection with their applications for loans upon such commodities.

Section 3 of the bill proposes to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation charter by eliminating certain restrictions from the present law.

Section 4 of the bill proposes to set forth goals for permanent reserves of certain farm commodities. The permanent reserve of wheat is fixed in the amount of 400,000,000 bushels, the permanent reserve of corn is fixed in the amount of 600,000,000 bushels, and the permanent reserve of cotton is fixed in the amount of 4,500,000 running bales.

The bill provides for the acquisition of the reserves through the support-price-loan system.

Commodities placed under loan and thereafter unredeemed should be taken over by the Secretary and made a part of the permanent reserves of such commodities.

The section further provides that all commodities placed in such permanent reserves shall not be considered in the computation of total supply for the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and shall not be taken into consideration in determining acreage allotments, marketing quotas, or price-support levels as provided by existing law.

Section 5 provides that acreage planted to wheat and cotton for the crop year of 1949 shall not be taken into consideration, in consideration of future allocation of acreage where quotas are imposed.

Section 6 provides that in the event the reserves as specified in the act shall be built up to the full amount, then the Secretary shall be authorized to propose production and marketing quotas for the next year's crop, and in the event such quotas are not approved by the producers of any given commodity, then the Secretary is authorized to discontinue support prices for such commodity.

Section 7 of the act provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall confer with other Federal agencies with respect to the exchange of reserve stocks of farm commodities for strategic and critical materials produced abroad and needed for stock piling in the States of such materials.

The ends to be attained through the enactment of the suggested legislation are as follows: First, to protect producers of farm commodities in providing for them support prices; second, to protect consumers in providing a substantial stock pile of basic farm commodities for use in case of emergencies such as drought or war; and, third, to provide a plan for stabilizing the price of farm commodities at or near the full parity price of such commodities.

New provisions, changes in or amendments to the existing agricultural program are now being proposed.

One of the important new provisions will be the vitalization of the concept of a Nation-wide ever-normal granary system to be used first to embrace all kinds of storage such as warehouses and elevators and other forms of acceptable storage for farm products and, second, the amount of each of the approved commodities which may be fixed as a goal to be and constitute the quantity of such granary or reserve.

The plan or bill being proposed provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause a survey to be made to determine what storage facilities are now available and the information secured will advise the Congress and the country of the points, or areas, where satisfactory storage is nonexistent. In addition to the information with respect to the points where storage should be provided the Secretary will be authorized to advise the Congress where storage should be provided and the kind of such storage recommended. It is not contemplated that competitive storage of any kind or character shall be either authorized or constructed. In other words, no additional storage of any kind shall be provided or even considered at points or in areas where storage is already in existence. The plan under consideration provides for a permanent system of support prices at a certain percent of the parity price of any given farm product. If and when loans are made the products pledged as security will be placed in Government approved and supervised warehouses. Thereafter, if the loan is not paid and the farm product redeemed then the commodity pledged will be retained by the Secretary and converted into what is termed a national stock pile of the commodity mentioned.

The plan will set forth the amount of the various commodities to be stock-piled. If and when the stock pile of any given farm product is built up to the point to be fixed by law, then the Secretary of Agriculture will be authorized and directed to call a referendum by the producers of any such commodity on the issue of whether or not quotas shall be authorized and provided for the next year's crop.

In the event the producers shall fail and refuse to approve of quotas for any commodity and the stock pile continues to expand, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall be authorized to withhold support prices for any such product until such time as the said stock pile is reduced to such an amount as to make it feasible and sound to resume the program of stock-piling. The program of warehousing and stock-piling of farm commodities is being considered as a major agriculture policy.

The policy is being presented and developed as a plan to stabilize the price of farm products at or near the full parity price of any such product. The plan will provide, first, a price floor for farm products and in so doing will enable farmers to plan their crop production accordingly and, second, the plan will provide against runaway prices to consumers. When the stock pile is developed and thereafter, in an emergency, such as a war or draft, then the Secretary will be authorized and directed to sell from such stock pile commodities in short supply and spiraling in price first, to farmers for seed and, second to mills for processing and distributing such products at prices to cover the cost of the loan and incidental expenses, per unit, or the full parity price, whichever is the lower.

If the present law respecting support prices in the form of loans, remains unchanged, then support prices will fluctuate from time to time between 60 and 90 percent of the parity price of any mentioned farm product. Speaking for myself, and not as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, I favor a fixed support price of basic agricultural products at 90 percent of the parity price of such products.

The full parity price of any farm commodity is intended to give the producers enough money for such product to enable them to purchase the products of industry which they need in carrying on their businesses.

This concept set up a 100-percent standard of living for farmers. It is obvious to me that a 90-percent support price will reduce the farm standard of living from 100- to a 90-percent standard of living. If the support price is reduced as low as 60 percent of parity, as now provided by law, effective January 1, 1950, then the plan provides for a 60-percent standard of living for farmers and such a plan or program is entirely foreign to my way of thinking.

AMENDMENT OF DISPLACED PERSONS ACT

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 to provide for the admission to the United States of certain persons of Russian origin residing in China. These are the displaced persons who were displaced by the Russian revolutions, both under the Kerensky regime and under prior regimes.

The bill (S. 666) to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 to provide for the admission into the United States of certain persons of Russian origin residing in China, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EDUCATIONAL BENEFITS OF CERTAIN VETERANS

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1, and I ask unanimous consent that a very brief explanatory statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from New Jersey will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 672) to amend part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) so as to provide entitlement to educational benefits for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted prior to October 6, 1945, on a same basis as for those individuals who enlisted or reenlisted within 1 year after October 6, 1945, introduced by Mr. HENDRICKSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. HENDRICKSON was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENDRICKSON

This is a "tidying-up" bill which will insure equal treatment to all men who enlisted in armed forces up through October 6, 1945. As matters now stand, all who joined armed forces before October 6, 1945, have their educational benefits cease accumulating as of July 25, 1947, the end of the war powers acts. But Public Law 190 was passed in October 1945 in an attempt to encourage and stimulate enlistments and said that those who enlisted between October 6, 1945, and October 5, 1946, were entitled to the maximum benefits under the GI bill of rights laws as passed by Congress.

For example, two boys enlist, one on October 1, 1945, serves until October 1, 1948, his benefits under Public Law 346 ceased accumulating on July 25, 1947. Second boy enlisted October 7, 1945, serves until October 7, 1947, his benefits continue accumulating straight through and he gets more schooling under GI than did a man (No. 1) who served a year longer.

EMPLOYMENT OF HANDICAPPED VETERANS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the kind suggestion of the Disabled American Veterans of the United States, I am glad to reintroduce a bill previously identified as S. 1325, of the Eightieth Congress.

The purpose of this bill is to encourage the employment of handicapped veterans.

The bill (S. 677) to encourage employment of veterans with pensionable or compensable service-connected disabilities through Federal reimbursement to any employer, insurer, or fund, of amounts of workmen's compensation paid on account of disability or death arising out of such employment, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ADMINISTRATIVE COURT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to improve the administration of justice by the creation of an administrative court of the United States. In view of the fact that the bill is brief, I ask that it be printed in full in the body of the RECORD, and that a statement explanatory of the bill be printed in the body of the RECORD immediately following the text of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Nevada, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 684) to improve the administration of justice by the creation of an Administrative Court of the United States, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a court of record known as the Administrative Court of the United States. By and with the advice and consent of the Senate the President shall appoint a chief judge and four associate judges for the court, who shall be learned and experienced in both the general and administrative law of the United States but shall not, within 5 years of such appointment, have served as an officer or employee in the executive branch of the Government of the United States. No more than three of the judges of the court shall be appointed from the same political party. It shall be organized and begin to function as soon as its chief judge and two of its associate judges shall have been appointed and qualify. Each judge shall hold office during good behavior and receive a salary equal to that of a circuit judge. On the request of the court any active or retired judge of the United States may on his consent be assigned, by the chief judge of his court or the Chief Justice of the United States, to duty as a judge of the court for a temporary period or for participation in specified cases there pending. The chief judge shall have precedence and preside at any session of the court which he attends. Whenever the chief judge is not present, is unable to perform the duties of his office, or the office is vacant, his duties shall devolve pro tem upon the associate judge in active service who is next in precedence. The associate judges shall have precedence according to the seniority of their commissions but, if commissions bear the same date, precedence shall be determined according to seniority in age.

JURISDICTION AND POWERS

SEC. 2. To provide an effective remedy for every wrong to any person as well as to provide for the just enforcement of public policy except (1) with respect to cases otherwise cognizable in the Court of Claims, the Customs Court, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the Tax Court or (2) so far as a money judgment is sought, an issue of tax liability is presented, or the grant or denial of a patent is questioned.

(a) The court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all cases which, except for this act, would be within the jurisdiction of any court of the District of Columbia (1) for the judicial review of agency action or (2) for the civil enforcement of the rules, orders, or investigative demands of any agency.

(b) The court may take jurisdiction in any case involving the judicial review of agency action, otherwise cognizable or pending in any court of the United States other than the Supreme Court, at the request of any person who (1) desires to bring such an action or (2) has brought it elsewhere but seeks to transfer it to the court before trial, argument, or submittal for decision.

(c) The court may take jurisdiction in any case involving the civil enforcement of the rules, orders, or investigative demands of any agency, otherwise cognizable or pending in any court of the United States other than the Supreme Court, at the request of any person against whom such an action has been brought but has not been tried, argued, or submitted for decision.

(d) With the permission of the court any agency may institute in the court an original action for the suspension or revocation of the whole or part of any license otherwise subject to revocation by the agency.

(e) In any case in which jurisdiction is conferred by this section the court shall have all the powers of any court which has, or but for this act would have, jurisdiction. In addition, in connection with any case in which jurisdiction is conferred upon the court by this section or in any case which may be instituted in the court for the purpose by any person or agency, the court shall have authority (1) to declare in any dispute the rights, privileges, immunities, and legal relations of any person or agency with respect to agency action or powers and (2) to direct, compel, or otherwise provide for the taking of agency action wrongfully withheld or erroneously applied. For all purposes the court shall be deemed an independent, specialized, and superior tribunal with respect to the subject matter and issues of fact or legislation before it, endowed with primary jurisdiction and final authority, and created to assure protection of all persons, conformity with legislative policy, and uniformity in the interpretation and administration of law.

OPERATION AND PROCEDURE

SEC. 3. The official station of the judges of the court shall be the District of Columbia. Not less than three judges shall constitute the court in any case of a type which, except for this act or if brought in another court, would require a court of more than one judge. Otherwise any one or more of the judges of the court, including judges temporarily assigned thereto, shall suffice as provided by the rules of the court. Where more than one judge sits, a majority of the judges of the court for the case shall constitute a quorum. The court shall hold an annual term at the seat of government but may hear or decide cases at general, special, or adjourned terms or sessions at any place within the jurisdiction of the United States. In any case in which the permission of the court is required it may be sought by ex parte petition or otherwise as the court may provide by rule or instruction. A written opinion shall be filed as a part of the record in each case, certified to each of the named parties therein, and published in compilations issued by the court from time to time. Save as modified by the court, general rules of procedure in the district courts of the United States shall govern. So far as pertinent, the general provisions of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C., part V) and the provisions thereof respecting procedure in the Court of Claims (28 U. S. C., ch. 165) shall apply. The court, and each judge or commissioner thereof, shall possess all the powers of a district court of the United States for preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses, requiring the production of evidence, and achieving the execution of process.

JUDGMENTS AND REVIEW

SEC. 4. To assure in every case both that full justice shall have been done to each person and that public policy shall be fairly and equitably executed—

(a) In any case determined by one judge of the court, the judgment shall become final at the expiration of 30 days unless within that time (1) the parties waive rehearing and review by the court, in which case it shall become final upon such waiver, (2) it is modified or suspended by the judge who entered it, in which case the time shall begin to run again after such modification or the reentry of the judgment, or (3) any party thereto petitions for a review by three or more judges of the court sitting as an appellate division pursuant to the rules of the court. If such a petition is filed and denied, the judgment shall thereupon be final. If such review is granted, the judgment shall become final when and as affirmed, modified, or reversed by the appellate division of the court after opportunity for rehearing.

(b) In any case determined originally in the court by more than one judge, the judgment shall be final after opportunity for rehearing.

(c) Any final judgment of the court shall be reviewable only by the Supreme Court on writ of certiorari granted at the petition of any party, or on appeal if such would be available but for this act, (1) to the extent that such review may be required by the Constitution or (2) so far as the court may have failed in any case to afford full and equal protection to private and public rights, powers, privileges, or immunities. The court may also certify to the Supreme Court any question of law in any case as to which instructions are desired, and upon such certification the Supreme Court may give binding instructions on such questions.

MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 5. For the purposes of this act—

(a) The definitions stated in the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. sec. 451) and the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U. S. C. sec. 1001) shall be applicable to the same terms used in this act.

(b) The court and the judges thereof shall be subject to the pertinent general provisions of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. ch. 21). The budget of the court shall be handled in the same manner as that of the Court of Claims (28 U. S. C. sec. 605). Judges of the court may retire for disability in the same manner as judges of the Court of Claims (28 U. S. C. sec. 372).

(c) The officers and employees of the court shall be the same, and be governed by the same provisions of law so far as relevant, as those of the courts of appeals (28 U. S. C. ch. 47) and the Court of Claims (28 U. S. C. ch. 51). They shall also be subject to the general provisions of the Judicial Code applicable to officers and employees of other courts of the United States (28 U. S. C. ch. 57).

(d) The court shall at any time report to Congress the need for additional judges or for legislation in its field of special competence or jurisdiction.

The statement presented by Mr. MCCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MCCARRAN

I am today introducing a bill "to improve the administration of justice by the creation of an Administrative Court of the United States." The subject is not new. The condition it is designed to meet is not new. I should like to say a few words about both.

I

The need for a measure such as this is something we all know about generally. We know that government is growing larger in size. The complexity of the modern administrative machine of state increases daily. Its impact upon our people grows more intense. Its interests flow beyond the seas.

Now, with world leadership forced upon us, we must be even more vigilant that our domestic concerns and our institutions at home retain the vigor which has brought us this far along the road of history. We must avoid the regrettable chronicle of empires which, while extending their interests over the globe, neglected to make sure that there was commensurate progress at home.

But even on this continent times change and our institutions must be adjusted accordingly. In the field of government, the greatest development of the twentieth century has been the growth of administrative agencies and bureaus to do what Congress and the courts previously did. Nowadays more laws are made by administrative agencies than by Congress, except that we call those laws regulations instead of statutes. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars every year merely publishing those regulations, in the Federal Register and the Code of Federal Regulations. Similarly, bureaus and commissions decide far more specific cases than the courts, except that we call those decisions orders instead of judgments. Some are published in vast sets of law books, but the greater part of them never see the light of publicity.

Faced with this condition, we have taken various precautions to continue a government of divided powers. Congress still retains its authority to empower and to guide, by the instructions it writes into the public statutes or the appropriation acts. But those instructions have necessarily become more and more general. The inevitable consequence has been that administrative agencies have greater and greater latitude to interpret the statutes we write.

Similarly, we still have a system of courts. During the last 15 years many things have been done to strengthen them in numbers and in method. We have provided for more and more judges. The bar of the country has given its best efforts to modernize judicial procedure. The judicial system as such has been developed by a series of notable statutes. But still the courts, though augmented in numbers and facilities, are no longer the tribunals of primary resort in the matters which we have committed to administrative agencies. The latter make the rules and decide the cases in the first instance. In great part the courts serve merely as appellate agencies designed, or deeming themselves designed, to exercise their powers only to correct abuses of the grossest nature.

II

In one respect I believe we have been unfair to our judicial system in recent years. We have heaped upon it new tasks in connection with new legislation of a social nature, not realizing that in the growth of the country their old functions have also grown in magnitude. In an age of specialization, we have also failed to afford them an opportunity to specialize. We have demanded that their jurisdiction embrace both old and new functions. And the new functions of the last 15 years, as we all know, are matters of utmost intricacy.

Of course, we have allowed this situation to continue because we respect our judicial institutions. We also desire to continue their general jurisdiction unimpaired so that they may bring our Federal justice to every district of the country where they sit. I should be the last person to say that we should abandon our ideal of one system of courts, one bar, and one law.

Yet our history demonstrates that we have had to depart from that ideal very often. In a sense, we have abandoned it most markedly in setting up numerous boards and commissions to do what our courts would have done in an earlier day. We also departed from the ideal when we created the Court of Claims, the customs and patent courts, and the Tax Court.

But those specialized courts were set up not in derogation of our legal system, but in recognition that there were some specialties which required special courts to protect and foster—rather than to impair—our system of government under law. They are special courts only in the sense that they confine their attention to special subjects. Otherwise their methods and their judges are like those of other courts.

These special courts have been successful. I know of no real complaint about the special court system. It is therefore surprising that, despite the great expansion of Government and judicature in the last 15 years, no new specialized courts have been created for a generation or more. The reason, presumably, lies in the fact that we had previously and generously taken care of the several special fields of our law so that there was no great need for more of them.

III

But a dozen years ago it was widely proposed that there be established an administrative court. The proposal was endorsed and publicized by the American Bar Association. The idea appears to have perished for two reasons. First was the fact that, perhaps unwisely, it was proposed to abolish the specialized courts I have mentioned and merge them in the administrative court. Second was the fact that the legal profession turned its attention to more immediate problems such as the formulation of uniform rules of procedure and regulation of administrative procedure.

In considering remedies for some of the legal problems we have today, it has occurred to me that a properly constituted administrative court may contribute greatly to the improvement of the administration of justice. It may do so by contributing specialization where specialization is sorely needed, by relieving the regular courts of part of their burdens, and by aiding both Government and private interests through expert handling of the complex problems of administrative law.

It is an anachronism for us to accept specialization as a necessity in administrative law at the administrative level, but to assume that generalization is sufficient at the judicial level of the same subject. If—as we are told—it requires specialists to regulate securities for example, why is not some specialization at least desirable in courts dealing with security regulation cases? Of course the specialization is desirable. We have admitted it in our legislation in recent years. During the war we created an Emergency Court of Appeals to assure specialization and uniformity in the judicial review of price-control regulations. More recently we have created a tax court out of what was previously a board, in order to achieve a judicial specialization in the field of taxation.

There would certainly be no harm in relieving our regular courts of some of their duties in administrative-law cases. Such proceedings are extensive. The record in a single case may be many volumes of print. The issues are complex. The courts must, therefore, devote to them precious time during which litigants in regular cases must suffer delays.

On the other hand, an administrative court could bring to its task a degree of familiarity, expertness, and dispatch which would improve the over-all administration of justice greatly in administrative-law cases. For the lack of those things both Government and people suffer in this field. The Government is injured every time a court fails to understand the special problems in one of these cases. People seeking justice are injured every time a court, for lack of understanding, denies them their full rights or delays decision.

It should not be necessary to expand on these reasons. Obviously specialization is a matter of national policy, even in the judiciary, and we resort to it from time to time as need requires. Plainly the regular courts would be aided by relief from their present burdens. Manifestly expertness is needed at the judicial level for the adequate determination of intricate administrative-law cases.

IV

Believing as I do about these things, and with some familiarity as to legislative needs and judicial methods of our court system, I have sought to devise an Administrative Court which would be adequate to the problem but would not trench unduly upon either our regular or specialized courts in their essential functions. It has been necessary to determine (1) the type of court, (2) its jurisdiction, (3) its operational procedure, and (4) its setting in our appellate system. I should like to close this statement with a few words about each of these matters.

(1) We shall need an Administrative Court of several judges. I have proposed that there be five judges. They would be appointed in the usual fashion except that, because of the nature and purpose of the court, the appointees should have the special qualification of training and experience in administrative as well as other law. At the same time, however, it is essential that the court should not be made up of personnel drawn immediately from the executive branch because, among other things, appointments so made would require such judges to disqualify themselves in many cases and would also lead people to feel that such a court would be unduly partial to Government agencies. Of course the court will measure up to its purpose only to the extent that its judges measure up to the necessary qualifications.

(2) In the matter of the jurisdiction of the court, it seems to me that a simple system will not only suffice for immediate purposes but will permit growth and adaptation over the coming years. I have therefore proposed that the court have (a) exclusive jurisdiction over all administrative law cases instituted in the District of Columbia and (b) permissive jurisdiction, at the instance of the private parties involved, with respect to such cases instituted elsewhere. But in neither situation would the court supersede the Court of Claims, the customs and patent courts, or the Tax Court.

(3) The procedure of the court would be of two kinds and, for each kind, it would be similar to that with which we are all familiar. When the court sits as a trial court, it would operate like other trial courts—with one or more judges, etc. It would also be a reviewing or appellate court in the same fashion as other courts—with three or more judges sitting in a case. In other words, there would be nothing unusual about the method and procedure in the court. It might operate anywhere in the country, however, depending upon the needs of its business as time goes on.

(4) In appropriate cases as required by the Constitution, and in any case in which the court should fail to afford equal protection to the parties before it, appeals could be taken to the Supreme Court in the same fashion as in other cases in other courts.

These are the essentials of my proposal. The provisions of the bill I have introduced are quite simple. Any member of Congress and any lawyer can understand them. For the problem it is designed to reach, this proposal is in fact much more direct and simple than many of the schemes laid before us.

In closing I should like to say again, as I have on other occasions, that we have a duty here to keep our governmental machine attuned to the needs of today and tomorrow and the years to come. What we do here in the way of substantive legislation will not long endure if we do not also make sure that we have a governmental machine that can handle it. At the same time we must maintain unbroken contact with our democratic tradition of a government of divided powers under law. The proposal I have made, for an Administrative Court of the United States, should aid us in performing that duty and achieving that purpose.

RURAL HOUSING

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill relating to rural housing, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory analysis of the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 685) to provide assistance to farmers in securing farm housing and other farm buildings, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. SPARKMAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The analysis presented by Mr. SPARKMAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF THE FARM HOUSING ACT OF 1949

The Farm Housing Act of 1949, which I have today introduced, would provide authority for Federal assistance toward the construction and improvement of farm homes and other farm buildings. It would make available to farm residents a means, equally effective with those available to urban residents, of securing adequate, safe, and sanitary homes. The bill contemplates the extension of financial assistance through existing Federal agencies to the owners of farms without decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings and adequate other farm buildings, who are unable to finance such improvements through credit from other sources upon terms and conditions suitable for such purposes. Such financial assistance in the form of limited grants would also be extended to eliminate hazards to health and safety to the occupants of the buildings and to the community which cannot otherwise be improved. The bill also contemplates an extensive program of research and technical studies for the purposes of stimulating the construction of farm buildings, approving architectural design and utility of buildings, utilizing new and native materials, effecting economies in materials and construction methods and other phases of farm buildings with a view of reducing the cost and adapting farm buildings to more efficient and economical farm use. Technical services, including furnishing of building plans and specifications and supervision and inspection of construction, is another type of service authorized by the bill.

It is proposed to inaugurate the program by authorizing loans not exceeding $25,000,000 on and after the beginning of the first fiscal year after the enactment of the bill and additional amounts of loans on and after the beginning of the second, third, and fourth year after the enactment of the act of $50,000,000, $75,000,000, and $100,000,000, respectively.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

The bill, in section 2, would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Farmers Home Administration, to extend financial assistance to the owners of farms to enable them to construct, improve, alter, repair, or replace dwellings or other farm buildings so as to provide the applicants, their tenants, sharecroppers, and laborers with decent, safe, and sanitary living conditions and adequate improvements. For the purposes of this act, a farm is defined as one or more parcels of land operated as a single unit which is used for the production of agricultural commodities and customarily produces, or is capable of producing, for sale and home use agricultural commodities of a gross value equal to a value of $400 in 1944. Many rural tracts classified as farms in the census definition would not be eligible for assistance under this definition, but for the most part the units which would not be eligible are more accurately described as rural residences, the occupants of which are engaged primarily in pursuits other than agricultural, and the agricultural production from which is merely incidental.

Financial assistance under the bill would not be extended to the owners of farms now having adequate farm dwellings or other farm buildings or who are able to secure the necessary improvements through their own resources or from other credit sources on terms and conditions suitable for the purposes of the loan.

Section 3 would authorize loans for the period of 33 years at 4 percent interest on farms having income and earning capacity sufficient to repay the full sum loaned. Section 4 would authorize loans on farms having adequate agricultural or other income to support adequate housing and other buildings only in connection with the undertaking of the owner of the farm to enlarge or otherwise develop its agricultural income, so that within a period of 10 years the full obligation of the owner with respect to such loan could be met. During the intervening period, installments due on the loan would be credited as paid in amounts not exceeding the annual installment of interest and 50 percent of the accrued principal installments in any year to the extent only that the borrower's income is, in fact, insufficient to enable the borrower to make such payments on schedule. The credits on the loan would inure only to the benefit of the owner of the farm at the time of the loan, except that, with the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture, such credits might continue to be extended to some other eligible person who acquires the farm after such a loan is made.

Some farming units coming within the definition of the farm in the bill are so situated or are so nonproductive that there is little possibility of enlarging or developing them into self-sustaining units. Dwellings and other buildings on such units often constitute severe hazards to the safety and health of the occupant, his family, and the community. Section 5 would authorize the Secretary to make grants or combinations of loans and grants with respect to such farms to cover the costs of improvements or additions such as structural supports, repairing roofs, providing toilet facilities, convenient and sanitary water supply, screens or other similar repairs or improvements. The amount of financial assistance on such farming unit would be limited to $1,000 on farms having a single dwelling or a total of $2,000 to any one owner. The grant portion of the assistance with respect to such farms would be limited to $500 for any one farming unit or dwelling.

Loans under sections 3, 4, and 5 of the bill would be secured by the applicant's equity in the farm and such additional security or collateral as may be necessary to reasonably assure repayment of the indebtedness. When the borrower is able to refinance such loans through cooperative or other private lending sources, he will be required to do so.

TECHNICAL SERVICES AND RESEARCH

Section 6 of the bill would require that all buildings constructed or improved by means of financial assistance under the bill should be substantially constructed and in accordance with such building plans and specifications as the Secretary might require. The construction and repair of such buildings so financed would be supervised and inspected to the extent required by the Secretary. In addition to such services to borrowers under this authority, the Secretary would also be authorized to furnish to other persons, with or without charge, building plans, specifications, and construction supervision and inspection regarding farm dwellings and other farm buildings. Section 6 also would authorize the Secretary to conduct research and technical studies in the field of farm housing and other buildings, including the development, demonstration, and promotion of construction of adequate farm dwellings and other buildings; and other research studies designed to reduce the cost of, and adapt, farm buildings, fixtures, and appurtenances for more efficient farm use.

ADMINISTRATION

The bill would be administered by the Secretary through existing agencies. The Farmers Home Administration, now administering the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, is adequately organized to perform the functions of the Secretary with respect to financial assistance. Existing committees appointed under prior authority, composed primarily of local farmers, would be required to approve the application for financial assistance and to recommend the values of farms for security purposes. The research and technical services can be adequately performed under the direction of existing agencies in the Department of Agriculture.

Under section 7 of the bill, veterans and families of deceased servicemen would be given preference as between eligible applicants seeking assistance.

In section 9, the Secretary would be authorized to establish the standards for adequate housing and other farm buildings by farms or localities, taking into consideration the type of housing, meeting the needs of the family using the housing, the type and character of the farming operations, and the size of the farm and its earning capacity. The recipient of a loan or grant would be required not to change the terms of any lease or other agreement with the occupants of the farm by reason of the improvements constructed with financial assistance under the act.

Section 10 provides the necessary power to the Secretary to service loans of this type. The authority of the Secretary in this respect is similar to the authority now vested in him with respect to loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

COST OF THE PROGRAM

With respect to loans under sections 3, 4, and 5 of the bill, the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to borrow from the Secretary of the Treasury such sums as the Congress might from time to time determine. The initial borrowings which would be available until expended would be limited to $25,000,000. At the beginning of the second year after the enactment of the act, the Secretary could borrow for the purpose of making loans an additional $50,000,000, and during the third and fourth years after the enactment of the act, could borrow $75,000,000 and $100,000,000, respectively. The terms and conditions of such borrowings would be those agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury with interest determined in relation to the current average rate of outstanding marketable obligations of the United States at the end of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations by the Secretary. The Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act for the purpose of advancing funds to the Secretary of Agriculture.

With respect to loans under section 4 on potentially adequate farms, the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to make commitments for credit contributions aggregating $500,000 per annum for not more than 10 years in connection with loans made on and after the beginning of the first fiscal year after the enactment of this bill. On and after the beginning of the next three fiscal years, the aggregate of these commitments would be limited to $1,000,000, $1,500,000, and $2,000,000 per annum, respectively.

Under section 13, it is contemplated that direct appropriations would be made whenever necessary to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to repay his obligations to the Secretary of the Treasury to the extent of the actual contributions of credits made by the Secretary on the principal due from borrowers under section 4, and the interest on a similar sum due on the notes and obligations of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Treasury. The amount of money needed for grants under section 5 would also be appropriated, but not to exceed $1,000,000 on and after the beginning of the first fiscal year after the enactment of this act and additional sums of $2,500,000, $4,000,000, and $5,000,000, respectively, for the next three fiscal years.

Authorization is also provided for such further sums as may be necessary for the Secretary to carry out the provisions of the act, including administrative expenses in connection with loans and technical services, research and the distribution of the results thereof.

COMPARISON WITH OTHER AUTHORITY

Title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, by the Farmers Home Administration Act of 1946, authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make and insure loans for terms of not to exceed 40 years at 4 percent interest for the acquisition and improvement of efficient family type farms. Such loans are required to be secured by a first lien and limited funds available under this authority are required to be allocated between the States on the basis of population and the prevalence of farm tenancy.

The prime purpose of this authority is to provide the opportunity for capable farm tenants, sharecroppers, and laborers to become farm owners. In connection with this purpose, of course, adequate farm dwellings and other buildings are essential. However, the assistance which might be rendered under existing authority is limited by the requirement of a first lien, by the distribution of funds, and by the limitation of the assistance to family-type farms not greater than average value. The proposed legislation would expand the scope of assistance, without these limitations, to the present owners of farms who cannot qualify for assistance under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act but who nevertheless are without adequate housing or farm buildings and without adequate credit. The minimum security requirements of Federal land bank loans eliminate the many farm owners who are in need of adequate farm homes and farm buildings and who are without sufficient credit base to be eligible for a Federal land bank loan. The proposed legislation makes no minimum security requirements other than that reasonable security be taken for the loan. Similarly, the programs authorized by the National Housing Act, the Housing Act of 1948, and the United States Housing Act of 1937, although including some authority for assistance in rural areas are designed primarily to meet the needs of urban residents. The loan terms and conditions, the security requirements and the administrative organizations under these statutes are not designed to meet the need of credit for the farm owner for the construction of his dwelling or other farm buildings.

The provisions of the various general housing bills that have been introduced in this Congress are inadequate to meet the farm needs, primarily because the authority for financial assistance is limited to loans for farm housing and facilities incident to family living. This would preclude the making of loans for the construction or repair of buildings the farmer must have in order to increase his farm income sufficiently to support a decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling he might secure by means of assistance under such legislation. The Farm Housing Act of 1949, on the other hand, would authorize financial assistance for both the dwelling and other farm buildings, so that the farm operation could be made more efficient and thus increase the probability of repayment on many of the loans, reduce the number of loans which would qualify only under the provisions of section 4 relating to credits because of insufficient farm income, and should have a significant and beneficial influence upon the agricultural pattern and agricultural production of the Nation.

HOUSING FOR VETERANS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill relating to housing for veterans, and I ask unanimous consent that a brief analysis of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the analysis will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 686) to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, in order to assure the availability of low-cost financing on liberal terms to World War II veterans who need homes, introduced by Mr. SPARKMAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory analysis of the bill presented by Mr. SPARKMAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSED BILL TO AMEND THE GI BILL IN ORDER TO ASSURE LOW-COST FINANCING ON LIBERAL TERMS TO WORLD WAR II VETERANS WHO NEED HOMES

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF BILL

Section 512: This section provides an adequate secondary market for GI 4-percent home loans. To encourage lenders to make new 4-percent GI loans available to veterans, the bill requires that lenders who sell to the market shall certify that they will reinvest an equivalent amount in new GI loans carrying an interest rate not in excess of 4 percent. The authority to purchase loans would expire June 30, 1952.

Section 513: This section seeks to assure the opportunity to obtain a 4-percent GI home loan for any credit-worthy veteran who is unable to obtain one from a private lender. The Administrator of Veterans Affairs is authorized to make such loans (with a $10,000 limit on individual loans) if he is satisfied that the veteran can afford the loan and is unable to get a GI loan through private channels. The Administrator's authority to make direct loans would run until June 30, 1951.

Section 514: This section directs the Secretary of Treasury to provide the necessary funds (up to $800,000,000 for the secondary market, and up to $500,000,000 for direct loans, with specified fiscal year limits) out of the proceeds from the sale of securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended. The Treasury will receive interest at the going rate (to the Treasury) on funds thus made available to the Administrator of Veterans Affairs.

Section 515: This section terminates the guaranty of second mortgage loans under section 505a of the GI bill. The present second mortgage type of home purchase plan raises financing costs to the veteran at least 10 percent above the costs of a straight 4-percent first-mortgage GI loan. This is true because of the higher rate of interest (4½ percent) and insurance premium (one-half of 1 percent) charged for the underlying FHA-insured first mortgage, because of duplication of costs, and because of brokerage and other charges permitted on FHA-insured loans which are not allowable on GI loans guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration.

Section 516: This is a separability clause for the loan guaranty provisions of the GI bill.

Section 2: This section amends the National Housing Act and removes from the Federal National Mortgage Association the authority to purchase GI loans, except for previous commitments.

To encourage lender support of low-interest mortgage loans, this section also removes FNMA authority to purchase any mortgage loan which carries an interest rate higher than 4 percent, except for previous commitments.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT RELATING TO LEPROSY

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the leprosy situation in the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with a letter from the president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, Washington, D. C., together with a petition signed by sundry patients at the Carville (La.) National Leprosarium, several of whom are residents of the State of Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill, together with the letter and peition, will be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached to the petition.

The bill (S. 704) to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the leprosy situation in the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. PEPPER, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "National Leprosy Act."

TITLE I—DISSEMINATION OF PERTINENT FACTS CONCERNING LEPROSY

SEC. 101. (a) It shall be one of the purposes of this act to promote an enlightened public opinion, a new and more accurate understanding on the part of the American public upon the subject of leprosy as one of the major requirements in the national plan to effect control and the elimination of leprosy in the United States, by disseminating to Federal and State health agencies, including Federal and State medical colleges; private medical colleges and nurse-training schools, and other private agencies that are in any way concerned with the diagnosis and/or treatment of communicable disease; the medical profession of the United States, and to the general public, the pertinent facts essential to each group and agency listed above, concerning leprosy, including information upon the latest improved medicine and methods for treating this disease, and including a statement of the procedure to be followed to obtain proper treatment.

(b) The leprosy health problem in the United States being a national responsibility, the Public Health Service, as an agency of the Federal Government, is hereby charged with the duty of preparing and disseminating the information outlined in section 101 (a) of this title.

(c) In carrying out the provisions of this title, it shall be the duty of the Public Health Service to promote the welfare of the people of the United States by aiding and fostering a spirit of tolerance and understanding upon the part of the public, in the interests of persons who have, or who may in the future contract leprosy, as an initial step in the national fight against this disease, and by showing the injustice of the leprosy stigma for the purpose of allaying the unreasonable fear of this disease in the public mind.

(d) The word "leper" shall not be used in any statement, lecture, data, report, or other material prepared by the Public Health Service subsequent to the passage of this act.

SEC. 102. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the Public Health Service shall—

(a) advise and cooperate with other agencies and departments of the Federal Government, with State governments and agencies, and with private agencies functioning in the field of health;

(b) collect and analyze statistics and make studies, investigations, and reports on conditions, problems, and needs in the leprosy field in the United States and in other countries, and disseminate to the people of the United States pertinent information thus obtained.

SEC. 103. The Surgeon General, Public Health Service, is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, for books of reference and periodicals, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and as may be provided by the Congress from time to time.

SEC. 104. There is authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, for such additional administrative expenses of the Public Health Service as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including such expenses as are described in section 103 of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purposes.

TITLE II—TREATMENT OF LEPROSY PATIENTS

SEC. 201. In order to encourage persons afflicted with leprosy to apply for treatment, the Public Health Service is hereby authorized and directed to provide suitable methods and facilities for treatment purposes generally more accessible to leprosy patients, as outlined in this title, and to establish leprosy-treatment principles, methods, and regulations for administering leprosy treatments more in harmony with the customs of society as applied to the care and treatment of persons afflicted with other diseases.

SEC. 202. In carrying out the provisions of this title the Surgeon General is authorized and directed to—

(a) arrange and provide for administering treatment to certain veteran patients in Veterans' Administration hospitals; certain other patients in State, county, and city hospitals; and in leprosy-treatment centers other than and in addition to the present national leprosarium; certain others as out-patients, and to have treatment administered to certain patients in their homes.

(b) to supply or pay for the medical treatment which, in his opinion, is most suitable for use in each case treated outside of Public Health Service hospitals, and to supply printed instructions covering the use of such treatment: Provided, That payment for medicines administered to veteran patients by the Veterans' Administration hospitals will be made by the Veterans' Administration;

(c) base the decision, as to the locality at which treatment is to be administered, upon the type of the disease contracted in each case, the degree of communicability of the disease when the case is examined by the Public Health Service; the proximity of the patient's home or place of residence to the nearest available hospital or treatment center, and the feasibility of treating the patient as an out-patient, or of administering treatment in the patient's home.

(d) establish such regulations governing treatment of leprosy patients at leprosy-treatment centers, at other hospitals, as out-patients treated at such centers and hospitals, or as home patients, as will be conducive to and encourage the voluntary application for treatment upon the part of persons afflicted with leprosy.

(e) utilize the services and facilities of any executive department or agency of the Federal Government, as needed to carry out the provisions of this act, in accordance with an agreement with the head thereof. Payment for such services and for the use of such facilities shall be made as may be agreed upon between the Surgeon General and the head of the department or agency furnishing them.

SEC. 203. In carrying out the provisions of sections 201 and 202 of this title the Surgeon General is authorized and directed to arrange with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for the admission and treatment of veterans of the armed forces afflicted with a noncommunicable type of leprosy, for hospitalization or out-patient treatment; and for admission and treatment of veterans with a communicable type of the disease who have made sufficient progress toward its arrestment to justify their transfer to a Veterans' Administration hospital for the remainder of the treatment; and for the admission and treatment of such other veteran patients as may be approved by the Surgeon General for treatment in a Veterans' Administration hospital.

SEC. 204. The Surgeon General will arrange with the director of State health departments, in appropriate cases, or with the responsible head of State, county, and city hospitals for the admission and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy of a noncommunicable type as hospitalized, or as out-patient cases; and persons with a communicable type of the disease who, in the opinion of the Surgeon General, have made sufficient progress toward its arrestment to justify receiving the remainder of the treatment in or from an approved hospital other than the national leprosarium.

SEC. 205. (a) The Surgeon General is hereby authorized to arrange with any qualified physician in the United States to treat persons having leprosy in the patient's home.

(b) The Surgeon General will determine the qualifications of physicians to administer treatment to leprosy patients prior to authorizing the home treatment provided by this section.

SEC. 206. As a prerequisite to a patient being authorized to receive treatment for leprosy other than as a hospitalized patient in a United States marine hospital, or other treatment center operated by the Public Health Service, the Surgeon General is authorized to require a written agreement that the patient will follow the treatment instructions specified by the Public Health Service, until the disease is arrested and the official discharge from treatment requirements is received by the patient; and that, thereafter, the patient will regularly and promptly present himself for periodical physical check-up over the period designated by the Surgeon General. Failure upon the part of the patient to comply with such agreement will authorize the Surgeon General to transfer the patient to a suitable Public Health Service hospital for treatment.

SEC. 207. The Public Health Service shall receive into any hospital or treatment center operated by that service, and not set aside and reserved for treating mental patients, or designated as a tuberculosis hospital, any person afflicted with leprosy who presents himself for care and treatment, and to send for any person reported by the proper health authority of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to be afflicted with leprosy, and to convey such person to the nearest suitable hospital or treatment center, if necessary, for an examination to determine the type of the disease contracted, and the place where the patient is to receive treatment in accordance with the provisions of this title.

SEC. 208. All cases determined by the Public Health Service to be of a communicable type of leprosy which, in the opinion of the examining officer, cannot be satisfactorily treated except at a marine hospital or other treatment center operated by the Public Health Service, will be transferred by the Surgeon General to the United States marine hospital, not set aside for mental, or tuberculosis patients, nearest the patient's home, or to such hospital in a nonendemic State as may be desired by the patient concerned, or by the parents, or guardian, if the patient is a minor: Provided, That patients having a communicable type of the disease who reside in a nonendemic State will be sent to a United States marine hospital in a nonendemic State for treatment.

SEC. 209. Release of patients from treatment requirements, regardless of where the treatment is administered, will be by the authority of the Surgeon General or his designated representative in each case.

SEC. 210. Transportation of patients, except those being treated as out-patients, from their place of residence to hospitals and treatment centers and return to their homes within the United States and its Territories, when discharged, shall be met with funds available for the maintenance of hospitals of the Public Health Service, except in those cases where another Federal agency is authorized or required to pay for such transportation.

SEC. 211. The Surgeon General is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, and as may be provided by Congress, from time to time.

SEC. 212. There is authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, for such additional administration expenses of the Public Health Service in carrying out the provisions of sections 201 to 211, inclusive, of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 213. Except as specifically provided herein, nothing in this title shall be construed as conferring on any Federal officer or employee, or any other person, the right to exercise supervision or control over the leprosy-treatment methods and policies established by the Public Health Service.

SEC. 214. In order to carry out the provisions of this title with respect to the establishment of such additional leprosy-treatment centers as may be found necessary, the Administrator, Federal Security Administration, is authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, a site in each of the four endemic States of California, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas, and one site in a nonendemic State having a climate approximately described as cool and dry and not subject to extremely low temperatures in winter, and to erect thereon, furnish and equip such buildings and facilities, or to acquire by purchase or donation such site and installations as may be available and suitable, and to provide such personnel as are needed to establish and operate leprosy-treatment centers, as funds are made available therefor. When established, these treatment centers are to be known as "United States marine hospitals."

SEC. 215. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, a sum not to exceed $1,500,000 for the acquisition of a site and the establishment thereon of a leprosy-treatment center in a nonendemic State having a suitable climate as described in section 214 of this title, to provide facilities for administering leprosy treatment to approximately 200 patients at a time, in such a climate in comparison with the same treatment administered at the present national leprosarium.

(b) The amount authorized in this section to be appropriated shall include the cost of preparation of drawings and specifications, and supervision of construction, and other administrative expenses incident to the work.

TITLE III—THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON LEPROSY

SEC. 301. (a) There is hereby created the National Advisory Council on Leprosy, to consist of the Surgeon General ex officio, who shall be Chairman, and 11 additional members to be appointed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, by the Surgeon General with the approval of the Administrator, Federal Security Administration.

(b) Six of the appointed members shall be selected from leading medical authorities not otherwise in the employ of the Federal Government, who are outstanding in the study, diagnosis, or treatment of leprosy and thoroughly familiar with leprosy conditions and problems in the United States. One of the appointed members shall be selected from a national press organization, and one from a national veteran organization. One of the appointed members shall be a discharged leprosy patient whose disease has been arrested by treatment administered at the Carville (La.) National Leprosarium. Two of the appointed members shall be representatives of bona fide labor organizations.

(c) The five nonmedical members of the Council are authorized to vote on all matters considered by the Council except purely medical or technical matters pertaining to leprosy research and medical treatment administered to leprosy patients.

(d) Each appointed member shall be appointed for a term of 3 years, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and except that the first term for the originally appointed members shall expire, as designated by the Surgeon General at the time of the appointment, four at the end of 1 year, four at the end of 2 years, and three at the end of 3 years after the date of appointment. All appointed members shall be eligible for reappointment at the discretion of the Surgeon General.

SEC. 302. Each appointed member of the Council while attending conferences or meetings of such Council, or while otherwise serving at the request of the Surgeon General pursuant to this title, shall be entitled to receive compensation at the rate fixed by the Surgeon General, the rate of compensation to be the same for all members of the Council, but not to exceed $75 per diem, and shall also be entitled to receive an allowance for actual and necessary traveling expenses, including subsistence expenses, while so serving away from his place of residence.

SEC. 303. The Council shall meet as frequently as the Surgeon General deems necessary, but not less than once every 6 months. Upon the request by three or more members, it shall be the duty of the Surgeon General to call a meeting of the Council.

SEC. 304. It shall be the duty of the members of the Council to advise and consult with the Surgeon General upon any and all matters relating to the titles of this act, and upon other matters pertaining to leprosy conditions and problems in the United States, at the request of the Surgeon General, and to initiate recommendations as a council, or as individual members thereof, which they jointly or individually deem advisable and necessary to bring to the attention of the Surgeon General in order to accomplish the purposes of this act, and otherwise to improve the leprosy situation in the United States. The recommendations and reports of the National Advisory Council on Leprosy shall be printed as public documents.

SEC. 305. The Surgeon General is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and for printing and binding) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time.

SEC. 306. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, for administration expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including such expenses as are described in section 305 of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purpose.

TITLE IV—REHABILITATION AND REEMPLOYMENT OF LEPROSY PATIENTS

SEC. 401. In order to assist leprosy patients to prepare themselves for remunerative employment following the arrestment of the disease, the Surgeon General shall establish a rehabilitation and reemployment program for such patients who are treated at the national leprosarium or other leprosy-treatment center. This program shall—

(a) be designed to restore by education and training the skills and abilities in the patient's previous occupation, or provide in another more suitable occupation the requisite skills and abilities for self-support, and a reasonable degree of economic security for himself and family;

(b) be available for such patients as, in the opinion of the Surgeon General, or his representative, are physically able to study or take training, and who are expected to be employable, or capable of self-employment, at the termination of their treatment period;

(c) be available for any employable discharged leprosy patient treated by the Public Health Service or by the authority of that Service;

(d) include plans to obtain the cooperation of Federal, State, and other employment agencies, corporations, and businesses in placement of employable discharged leprosy patients.

SEC. 402. Educational and/or vocational training as may be needed and desired by the patient will be made available for hospitalized patients at any time during their treatment period when, in the opinion of the Surgeon General or his representative, such activities will not retard their recovery or interfere materially with their treatment. Such instruction and/or training will be continued during their stay at the hospital or treatment center as needed to complete the training objective.

SEC. 403. Employable discharged patients shall be given preference, without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, in filling employee vacancies in the Public Health Service hospitals and treatment centers for which they are or can be qualified by on-the-job training.

SEC. 404. On-the-job training at the leprosarium and treatment centers will be used as fully as practicable for vocational-training purposes under such supervision and methodical step-by-step guidance as will fit the patient, when discharged, to enter and satisfactorily fill the job for which he or she is being trained.

SEC. 405. Educational and vocational training will not be limited to that necessary to engage in the occupations available at the Public Health Service hospitals and treatment centers, but will be based as fully as practicable upon the needs and desires of the individual patient.

SEC. 406. The rehabilitation and reemployment program will be under the general supervision and control of the medical officer in charge of the hospital or treatment center. The active supervision of educational and training activities will be conducted by a licensed occupational therapist and such assistants as, in the opinion of the medical officer in charge, are necessary. The employment of this supervisory personnel, and the purchase of the minimum requirements in training equipment and supplies for the actual and exclusive use of this program, are hereby authorized.

SEC. 407. Work satisfactorily performed, including scholastic and training programs satisfactorily carried out by patients, or by discharged patients, shall be compensated at such hourly, daily, or monthly rates as, in the opinion of the Surgeon General or his representative, are most suitable for the kind of work or scholastic effort concerned, but which shall not exceed $50 per month, while the patient or discharged patient is in training.

SEC. 408. Upon the completion of the training period, or periods, patients who have qualified for regular employment and who, in the opinion of the Surgeon General or his representative, are physically able to carry on the work in the leprosarium or treatment center for which they have been trained, and in which occupation a vacancy exists to which the patient can be and is appointed, the compensation for such patient will be 75 percent of the rate paid by the Public Health Service to nonpatient employees engaged in such work.

SEC. 409. Employable discharged patients who return to the leprosarium or treatment center for reasons other than for additional treatment, when employed at these institutions, shall be compensated at the same rates, and be employed under the same conditions as are applicable to other nonpatient employees.

SEC. 410. The Surgeon General is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and for printing and binding, training equipment, and supplies) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, and as may be provided by Congress from time to time.

SEC. 411. There is authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, for the administration expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including such expenses as are described in section 410 of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purpose.

SEC. 412. The Surgeon General shall establish the necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title.

TITLE V—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR LEPROSY PATIENTS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

SEC. 501. There shall be included in the annual appropriations for the administration of the National Leprosarium and leprosy-treatment centers, provision for a fund to be known as the patient's welfare fund, from which patients taking treatment in these institutions who do not have an income equal in amount to $10 per month, who are not physically able to engage in such compensated tasks as are available, or for whom no such task is available for which they are qualified, or who are physically unable to take educational or vocational training, shall receive the sum of $10 per month to defray incidental expense common to the needs of all patients undergoing treatment over an extended period away from home.

SEC. 502. In order to carry out the provisions of section 501 of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, a sum not to exceed $20,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and such sums thereafter as Congress may provide.

SEC. 503. The dependent or dependents of leprosy patients who are hospitalized for leprosy treatment shall be entitled to receive a monthly family allowance for the period during which the patient continues to take such treatment, plus 1 month following the patient's discharge from treatment requirements.

SEC. 504 (a) The dependents of hospitalized leprosy patients authorized to receive the family allowance shall include the wife; child or children under 18 years of age and unmarried, including stepchildren and adopted children; the patient's father, mother, father-in-law, and mother-in-law, who have received their chief support from the patient for a period of 6 months before the patient entered the hospital for treatment; the patient's brother and sister under 18 years of age and unmarried, or who are physically or mentally unable to support themselves and unmarried, who have received their chief support from the patient for a period of 6 months prior to the date the patient entered the hospital for leprosy treatment.

(b) Monthly family allowance authorized in this title shall apply to those cases where the patient is a parent or guardian who is the breadwinner or provider for the family. In cases where the patient is a wife who is not the family provider but who is living with her husband and children immediately prior to her entry into the hospital for leprosy treatment under the supervision of the Public Health Service, the monthly family allowance will be 75 percent of the amount authorized in section 505 of this title.

(c) Dependents of such leprosy patients as are authorized by the Surgeon General to take treatment outside of Public Health Service hospitals shall be entitled to receive such portion of the family monthly allowance as are approved by the Surgeon General, based upon the actual need in each case for such family assistance, and the inability of the patient to continue to provide for his dependents without interfering with the leprosy treatment requirements, or his chances of recovery.

(d) Application for monthly family allowance shall be initiated by the patient. The medical officer or physician responsible for the patient's treatment will certify as to the correctness of the information furnished by the patient and forward the application to the Surgeon General, who, upon his approval of same, will forward the application to the Bureau of Public Assistance, Federal Security Agency, for payment.

SEC. 505. The monthly family allowance authorized for dependents of leprosy patients taking treatment under the supervision of, or by the authority of, the Public Health Service, are as follows:

(a) To a wife without children, $60; a wife and one child, $80; and an additional $20 for each additional child.

(b) To a child, but no wife, $42; with an additional $20 for each additional child.

(c) To one parent but no brother or sister, $50.

(d) To two parents but no brother or sister, $68.

(e) To one parent and one brother or sister, $68, with an additional $11 for each additional brother or sister.

(f) To two parents and one brother or sister, $79, with an additional $11 for each additional brother or sister.

(g) To a brother or sister but no parent, $42, with an additional $11 for each additional brother or sister.

SEC. 506. In the case of a wife living separate and apart from the patient under any temporary or permanent court order, or decree, in a divorce allowance, or legal-separation proceedings, or written agreement, the amount of the family allowance payable to such wife will not exceed the amount provided in such order, or decree in a divorce allowance, or legal-separation proceedings or written agreement to be paid to such wife, and if such order, decree, separation, proceeding, or agreement provides no amount to be paid such wife, no family allowance will be paid to her.

SEC. 507. In the case of a former wife divorced, the amount of the family allowance payable to such former wife divorced will not exceed the amount fixed in the court order or decree as the amount to be paid to such former wife divorced, and will not in any event, exceed the amount of $60 per month authorized in subparagraph (a) section 505, of this title.

SEC. 508. Changes in the status of a dependent which will terminate entitlement to a monthly family allowance include—

(a) Death of the dependent;

(b) Attainment of the age of 18 years by a brother, sister, or child, except when such dependent is physically or mentally incapable of self-support;

(c) The marriage of a brother, sister, or child;

(d) Marriage of a former wife divorced;

(e) Cessation of required degree of dependency of dependent fathers, mothers, brothers, or sisters;

(f) Divorce of wife without alimony, or a termination of alimony;

(g) Divorce of a husband from the patient will terminate entitlement of his dependents to any part of the family allowance paid under the provision for 75 percent of the total amount authorized, as provided in subparagraph (b) of section 504 of this title.

SEC. 509. Changes in the status of the patient which will terminate entitlement to monthly family allowance include:

(a) Death of patient;

(b) Discharge of patient from treatment requirements: Provided, That one additional monthly allowance shall be paid in case of the death or discharge of the patient;

(c) Unauthorized absence of the patient from the place of treatment designated by the Surgeon General, or unauthorized discontinuance by the patient of the treatment provided by, or by the authority of the Surgeon General, will authorize that authority to terminate entitlement to family allowance;

(d) The amounts of family allowance to be paid to dependents of native leprosy patients of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone, who reside in those areas, shall be determined by the Surgeon General, United States Public Health Service, within the limits specified in section 205, title II of this act: Provided, That said payments shall not be less than 25 percent of the amounts so specified.

SEC. 510. The Surgeon General is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and for printing and binding) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title; and as may be provided by Congress from time to time.

SEC. 511. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, for administration expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including such expenses as are described in section 510 of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 512. The Surgeon General will establish the necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title.

TITLE VI—COMPENSATION FOR DISABILITY INCIDENT TO LEPROSY

Sec. 601 (a) Prior to the discharge of leprosy patients from treatment requirements, the medical board authorizing or recommending their discharge from Public Health Service hospitals, shall determine the degree of physical disability, if any, sustained by the patient due to leprosy and/or treatment therefor. Such disabilities sustained by patients treated in other hospitals, or as out-patients, or as home patients, will be determined by the physicians responsible for their treatment, who will forward their recommendations thereon to the Surgeon General.

(b) The Surgeon General or his designated representative will review the findings and recommendations in each case, and if they are approved, they will be certified and forwarded to the Bureau of Public Assistance, Federal Security Agency, for payment of the following compensation for physical disability incident to leprosy.

(c) To discharged patients who are classified as totally and permanently disabled, there shall be paid a sum, starting immediately following their discharge, in the amount of $125 per month.

(d) To discharged patients who have suffered total blindness incident to leprosy the compensation paid shall be $150 per month.

(e) Patients who are found to be physically disabled incident to leprosy in a degree less than total shall receive a portion of the compensation authorized in this title, the amount of which shall be graduated in accordance with the percentage of their physical disability. Disabilities determined to be less than 10 percent will not be certified for compensation payments.

Sec. 602. Compensation received under the provisions of this title shall not bar the discharged patients from further improving their economic situation.

Sec. 603. Unauthorized departure of the patient from hospitals and treatment centers, or unauthorized discontinuance by the patient of treatment provided or authorized by the Public Health Service under the provisions of this act, will authorize the Surgeon General to cancel the right of such patient to receive the benefits provided by this title.

SEC. 604. The Surgeon General is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and for printing and binding) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and as may be provided by the Congress from time to time.

SEC. 605. There is authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated for administration expenses, including such expenses as are described in section 604 of this title, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for each year thereafter, the sum necessary for such purposes.

TITLE VII—EXPANSION OF LEPROSY RESEARCH

SEC. 701. (a) It shall be one of the purposes of this act to provide for an immediate expansion of research to discover—

(1) the method or methods by which leprosy is contracted and transmitted;

(2) a method or means for detecting the leprosy bacillus during the incubation period;

(3) more effective and faster-acting remedies and techniques for the arrestment of all types of leprosy; and

(4) the possibilities of developing preventive medicines and techniques for combating this disease.

(b) The Public Health Service is hereby charged with the duty of conducting and supervising the national research effort as outlined in section 701 of this title.

SEC. 702. (a) In carrying out the purposes of this title, the Surgeon General will conduct, assist, and foster research, experiments, demonstrations, and studies relating to the cause, method of transmitting, treatment, prevention, control, and elimination of leprosy's ability to survive and spread in the United States.

(b) The Surgeon General will coordinate research activities in the leprosy field conducted by the Public Health Service and similar research conducted by private research agencies, organizations, and institutions and make grants-in-aid to public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions for conducting leprosy research as authorized in this title.

SEC. 703. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, to carry out research in the field of leprosy the following sums for the years and purposes indicated:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, for leprosy research activities of the Public Health Service, or for grants-in-aid for leprosy research at the discretion of the Surgeon General, a sum not to exceed $100,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, for leprosy research activities of the Public Health Service, not to exceed $100,000, and for grants-in-aid for leprosy research not to exceed $100,000; and thereafter such sums as may be provided by Congress from time to time.

SEC. 704. Sums authorized for leprosy research for a fiscal year and remaining unencumbered at the end of such year shall remain available to the Public Health Service for such purpose for the next fiscal year (and for such year only), in addition to the sums authorized for such next fiscal year.

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

If any provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 802. It shall be the duty of the Surgeon General to insure that all laws passed by Congress and regulations established by the Public Health Service pertaining to the care, treatment, rehabilitation, and reemployment of leprosy patients are brought to the attention of patients undergoing treatment.

TITLE IX—AMENDMENTS

SEC. 901. Title III of the Public Health Service Act (Public Law 410, 78th Cong.) is amended by eliminating sections 331 and 332, part D, of that act, and by substituting therefor the provisions of title II, treatment of leprosy patients, of this, the National Leprosy Act.

SEC. 902. The provisions of this act supersede and invalidate the provisions of other national acts and instructions which are contrary to this act as applicable to the national plan for the control and elimination of leprosy in the United States.

SEC. 903. This act shall become effective 90 days after enactment.

The letter and petition, without the signatures attached, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF THE PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED, INC.,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1949.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
United States Senate,

DEAR CLAUDE: Herewith, we tender you a petition, signed by numerous patients at the Carville (La.) National Leprosarium, several of whom are residents of your State, Florida. This petition urges that you assume sponsorship of a bill to establish the National Leprosy Act, the original draft of which has already been tendered to you.

This bill, written by Col. George H. Rarey (U. S. Army, retired), who spent many years in the Orient and came into personal contact with many of the victims of Hansen's disease (leprosy), presents the most exhaustive and lengthy research into this field yet performed. Colonel Rarey has contacted eminent epidemiologists, specialists in treatment of this disease, the world over, and his findings represent an impartial picture of the great need of those afflicted by Hansen's disease, as well as their families, who are innocent victims of public ignorance, indifference, fear, and superstition.

The Patients' Federation, at Carville, as well as our own lodge there, which is headed by Mrs. Gertrude C. Hornbostel, whose signature is appended to the petition in question, and whose gripping and dramatic story, as the wife of heroic Maj. Hans Hornbostel (U. S. Army, retired), captured and held in a Jap prison camp at the outset of World War II, where she contracted Hansen's disease, is well known to the American public, and Stanley Stein, that great-hearted editor of The Star, the monthly publication put out by the patients, as they say, "to radiate the light of truth on Hansen's disease," and who, although himself a patient, and blinded more than 17 years by the disease, yet carries on a vigorous campaign for public enlightenment and justice for these afflicted—all these, and many more, fervently pray that you will use your best efforts to steer this bill through the Congress and thus afford needed relief to American citizens who are, today, incarcerated through no fault of their own, and whose requirements have not been adequately met by our great Government.

We pledge our cooperation, in every way possible, to speed this enactment.

Sincerely,

PAUL A. STRACHAN,
President.

UNITED STATES MARINE HOSPITAL,
POINT CLAIRE BRANCH POST OFFICE,
Carville, La., January 4, 1949.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
Senate Office Building,

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned citizens of Florida and others request your kind consideration and support of H. R. 6653, the National Leprosy Act, which was introduced in the Eightieth Congress and will be reintroduced in the Eighty-first, probably under a different number.

We, who are patients at this hospital, and under treatment, realize since our arrival here, and since becoming better acquainted with the different aspects of the disease, that there are many more patients in Florida and elsewhere in endemic States who are not under treatment than those who actually are. For this we blame the present harsh laws, which demand segregation of all cases and types, regardless of whether they belong to a type which is transmissible or not.

From a humanitarian and from a public-health point of view, such laws are wrong and work in reverse, particularly now that drugs have been found which will arrest the disease the same as tuberculosis can be arrested, without, however, being as transmissible as tuberculosis.

Since H. R. 6653 contains the modern approach to the management and treatment of the disease and since Florida is one of the endemic States, we ask you, as Senator from Florida, to give this bill your kind consideration and support.

Sincerely,

(Signatures omitted.)

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill, and I also desire to make a statement in reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the Senator may proceed.

The bill (S. 709) to establish a national housing objective and the policy to be followed in the attainment thereof and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BALDWIN (for himself, Mr. FLANDERS, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. TAFT, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. MORSE, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. LODGE, Mr. THYE, Mr. IVES, Mrs. SMITH of Maine, Mr. HENDRICKSON, and Mr. SCHOEPPEL), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, this bill is a housing bill, and it seems appropriate, with the introduction of the bill, to give some word of explanation concerning its origin. At the last session of the Eightieth Congress, the Senate passed the so-called Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. At the opening of the Eighty-first Congress, however, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] introduced a bill somewhat similar to the TEW bill, without the Republican sponsorship which previous housing bills had had.

Knowing that housing was one of the vital issues facing the American people, it seemed to many of us on this side of the aisle that we, as Republicans, should propose housing legislation. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], who last year was a member of the Joint Committee on Housing, was particularly active in the preparation of this bill. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and myself began work on the measure several weeks ago. Because the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] had worked on housing legislation—and I may say by way of interpolation that I think the senior Senator from Ohio is probably the best-informed man on the Senate floor on matters of housing—we asked the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New Hampshire to join with us. In fact, this measure contains many provisions of bills which the Senator from Ohio had previously cosponsored. It would have been most appropriate if the Senator from Vermont could have introduced this bill today, but, as he is necessarily absent, the task devolved upon me. So, Mr. President, I am introducing this bill on behalf of the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from New York, the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from New Hampshire, and a number of other Senators, including the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

The housing shortage is not news. The Democratic administration discovered it more than a decade ago. Until recently we had as many as 34 housing agencies dealing with the shortage. We have spent billions of dollars in alleged attempts to correct it. The shortage still exists. It seems to us that it is about time that we evolve a realistic, comprehensive approach.

Republicans recognize as well as anyone else that there is a housing shortage in the country and that some workable, feasible, understandable program is necessary to meet it. We believe that this bill does so most adequately. We have not attempted in this bill to outbid or outdo anybody. We have merely attempted to draft housing legislation designed to meet the American need.

In our deliberations over the provisions of the bill, we considered the matter of loans to veterans for housing and other private financing aids. This bill, Mr. President, is already 33 pages long, and it seemed to us the better part of wisdom not to incorporate in it provisions with reference to loans in aid of veterans and other private financing agencies, but to do that in a separate bill.

In this bill, Mr. President, we have opened the door for the widest kind of cooperation on the state and local level. We have included those provisions which are designed to encourage private financing and private construction, believing as we do that the obligation of meeting the need for housing must continue to rest largely upon local enterprise and individual and private action. We recognize, however, that housing is required in some areas at a cost beyond the reach of individual initiative and financing. We believe that the provisions of this bill adequately meet this situation.

It provides for the construction of 600,000 units over a period of 6 years with a maximum annual contribution of $240,000,000. There is a clause, however, which permits considerable flexibility—authorizing the President, through the Housing Authority, to increase or decrease this number in any one year, cumulatively, upon a finding that the condition of the building industry makes an increase possible or a decrease necessary.

The slum clearance title of the bill permits loans and grants to cities for the purpose of clearing blighted areas.

The bill also contains provision for farm housing. We have approached this problem, however, on a realistic basis, making provision for loans and grants to adequate farms and potentially adequate farms. We believe it economically unsound to give either loans or grants to farms that are not adequate or potentially self-sustaining. For farms with an adequate income but unable to secure private financing, the Secretary of Agriculture could make direct loans. If marginal farms can be improved within a reasonable period of time to be self-supporting, the plan would provide a combination of loans and grants for a period of 10 years.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senators from Alabama [Mr. HILL and Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER and Mr. LONG], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and myself, I introduce a bill to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

In his state of the Union message, the President said:

> Most of the houses we need will have to be built by private enterprise, without public subsidy. By producing too few rental units and too large a proportion of high-priced houses, the building industry is rapidly pricing itself out of the market. * * * The Government is now engaged in a campaign to induce all segments of the building industry to concentrate on the production of lower-priced housing.

In urging the production of homes large enough for family life at prices wage earners can afford, the President called for additional legislation to encourage such production. Mr. President, I believe this bill will accomplish that purpose.

This bill will make the more liberal FHA insurance aids available only for the construction of lower-cost homes. To help in getting the production of such homes which are large enough for family life, it offers additional incentives for the production of lower-cost three- and four-bedroom homes.

It improves and extends the FHA insurance available for long-term loans to housing cooperatives, particularly with respect to coperatives whose membership consists primarily of veterans of World War II. It provides for a number of aids to veterans' housing cooperatives in which the national veterans' organizations have expressed a very great interest, particularly in respect to cooperatives building individual homes for purchase by their veteran members, and in specifically authorizing the FHA to furnish technical advice and assistance to housing cooperatives in their organization and in the planning, construction, and operation of their projects.

To further assist in the production of more rental-type housing and lower-cost sales housing which average wage earners can afford, the bill would exempt from the 50-percent limitation on the amount of loans which can be purchased from any one mortgagee by the Federal National Mortgage Association, mortgages on cooperative housing projects, rental housing projects, and lower-cost homes built for sale. It would also extend the present authority of the FHA to insure loans for large-scale rental housing projects to March 31, 1950.

It encourages large-scale construction of lower-cost homes by improving the provisions for the insurance by the FHA of construction advances on groups of 25 or more single-family homes being constructed on a single site. It does this by adjusting both the maximum mortgage amount and the percentage of value to levels which will permit maximum accomplishments under this form of insurance consistent with the production of adequate housing at more reasonable prices.

Also, to assure that adequate financing will be available for projects undertaken by housing cooperatives, particularly veterans' cooperatives, it provides for direct, long-term Government loans through the Federal National Mortgage Association, where necessary private financing cannot be obtained even with FHA insurance available.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill will do much to help get a more adequate production of good housing at lower prices and lower rentals.

So that the Senators may have more complete information as to the details of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD following my remarks a section-by-section summary of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the summary of the bill, presented by the Senator from South Carolina, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 712) to amend the National Housing Act and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK (for himself, Mr. WAGNER Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. MYERS, Mr. HILL, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. LONG), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The summary of the bill presented by Mr. MAYBANK was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF BILL TO AMEND THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

This proposed bill consists of various amendments to the National Housing Act which affect mortgage insurance programs administered by the Federal Housing Administration and the secondary market program of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Section 1

The present authorization under title I of the National Housing Act to insure lending institutions against losses they may sustain on home modernization and repair loans and small loans (not exceeding $4,500) to finance the construction of modest homes expires on July 1, 1949. This section would extend that authorization on a permanent basis and would increase the present amount of insurance authorization under title I.

Section 2

This section would increase the total insurance authorization under title II of the National Housing Act by $1,000,000,000. The use of this additional authorization would require the approval of the President.

Section 3

Subsection (a) of this section would amend section 203 (b) (2) of the National Housing Act (relating to the maximum obligations of mortgages insurable under section 203 of the act) to simplify the provisions therein and to provide for increased maximum amounts for low-cost dwellings with three or four bedrooms. Paragraph (D) would be amended to provide for a maximum mortgage amount not to exceed $6,650 and not to exceed 95 percent of the appraised value of a single-family dwelling approved for mortgage insurance prior to construction. Such dollar amount limitation could be increased by not exceeding $950, in the case of a three-bedroom house, or $1,900 in the case of a four-bedroom house, where prescribed findings are made by the Federal Housing Commissioner. As paragraph (B) would become obsolete, provision is made for its repeal. (Paragraph (B) now provides for a maximum mortgage amount not to exceed $6,300 and not to exceed 90 percent of appraised value, and paragraph (D) now provides for a maximum mortgage amount not to exceed $6,000 and not to exceed 90 percent of appraised value, or 95 percent where the Commissioner determines it would not contribute to substantial increases in costs.)

This subsection (a) would also amend paragraph (C) of section 203 (b) (2) of the National Housing Act to provide a maximum mortgage amount not to exceed $9,450 (as contrasted with the present $9,500) and not to exceed the sum of 95 percent of $7,000 of the appraised value plus 70 percent of such value in excess of $7,000 and not in excess of $11,000 (as contrasted with the present 90 percent and 80 percent of such values) of a single-family dwelling approved for mortgage insurance prior to construction. This would make increases in maximum mortgage amounts under paragraph (C) conform more closely to graduated levels of appraised values.

Subsection (b) of this section would provide that, notwithstanding the repeal of the above paragraph (B), applications already filed for insurance thereunder could be approved, and insured mortgages could be refinanced thereunder.

Section 4, 5, 6, and 7

These are technical amendments made necessary by section 10 which is summarized below.

Section 8

This section would amend section 211 of the National Housing Act to authorize the Federal Housing Commission, with respect to dwellings of not more than four families, to issue regulations permitting provisions in insured mortgages for the deferrment of monthly payments in hardship cases beyond the control of the mortgagor. Such provisions could not extend the maturity of any mortgage for more than 3 years.

Section 9

This section would continue the present situation with respect to the applicability of the prevailing wage provisions of section 212 of the National Housing Act to cooperative housing projects and would bring under the prevailing wage provisions of section 212 the large-scale rental projects insured under the yield insurance title of the act.

Section 10

This section would add to the National Housing Act a new section 213 on cooperative housing mortgage insurance which would take the place of the provisions on this subject now contained in section 207 of the act. This new section would provide for insurance of 90 percent, 40-year, 4 percent interest loans on nonprofit cooperative ownership housing projects (as presently provided for under section 207) and of 100-percent, 40-year, 4 percent interest loans (as contrasted with the present 95-percent, 40-year, 4 percent interest loans) where at least 80 percent of the members of the cooperative are veterans of World War II. The maximum amount of the mortgage in the case of the 90-percent loan would remain at $8,100 per family dwelling or $1,800 per room, but in the case of the 100-percent loan provided for by this section, the maximum amount of the mortgage would be $9,000 per family dwelling or $2,000 per room. In the case of these ownership cooperatives the insurance would be based on current replacement costs.

This section would provide that the maximum principal obligation of an insured mortgage of a nonprofit cooperative corporation, organized for the purpose of constructing homes for transfer to its members, may equal the total of the principal obligations of mortgages for which such members could obtain insurance on the individual houses under section 203. This would be in lieu of the provisions now in section 207 limiting the principal obligation of an insured mortgage of such corporation to 90 percent of the value of the property and to $8,100 per family dwelling or $1,800 per room.

This section would also specifically authorize the FHA to furnish technical advice and assistance to housing cooperatives in the organization thereof and in the planning, construction, and operation of their projects.

Section 11

Section 301 of the National Housing Act, which authorizes the FNMA to purchase certain housing mortgages, now provides in effect that the aggregate amount of all such mortgages purchased by FNMA from one mortgagee may not exceed 50 percent of the amount of all mortgages made by such mortgagee which are otherwise eligible for purchase by FNMA. Section 11 of this bill would amend section 301 of the act to provide that in computing, for this purpose, the aggregate amount of mortgages purchased by FNMA from the mortgagee, there shall be excluded the amount of any such mortgages which are (1) insured under paragraph (D) of section 203 (b) (2) of the act (explained above), or (2) insured under section 207, section 213, or section 608 (including section 608 pursuant to section 610) of the act, or (3) guaranteed under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, if the amount of the mortgage does not exceed $7,000 per dwelling.

This section would also authorize the FNMA to make real estate loans which are accepted for insurance or insured under section 213 of the National Housing Act.

Section 12

This section would amend section 302 of the National Housing Act to increase (for the purposes of the above amendments to section 301) the aggregate amount of outstanding FNMA obligations.

Section 13

This section would amend section 305 of the National Housing Act to authorize FNMA to sell on terms or otherwise dispose of property acquired by it through foreclosure or other means. It may now dispose of such property only through cash sales.

Section 14

This section would amend section 4 (c) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act to increase the total amount of obligations which the RFC may purchase thereunder, so that it will have appropriate authority to purchase the additional FNMA obligations which would be authorized by the amendment to section 302 of the National Housing Act which is summarized above.

Section 15

This section would extend for 1 year (until March 31, 1950) the present authority of the FHA to insure mortgages on rental housing projects under section 608 of the National Housing Act.

Section 16

This section would amend section 610 of the National Housing Act (dealing with the insurance of mortgages on federally owned housing which is being sold) to raise the maximum permissible interest rate from 4 percent to 5 percent in the case of insured mortgages on 1- to 4-family dwellings.

Section 17

This section would amend section 611 of the National Housing Act (dealing with the insurance of mortgages, including construction advances, on groups of 25 or more single-family houses on a single site). It would permit the principal obligation of a mortgage insured under that section to be in an amount not exceeding 85 percent of the value of the completed project and not exceeding a sum computed on the individual dwellings as follows: $5,950, or 85 percent of the valuation, whichever is the lower amount, with respect to each dwelling, except that, in the case of a three- or four-bedroom unit, such dollar amount limitation could be increased in the same manner as the dollar amount limitation on a mortgage on such a unit insured under section 203 (b) (2) (D) explained in the above summary of section 3. Under the present provisions of section 611, the mortgage may not exceed 80 percent of the value of the completed project nor a sum computed on the basis of $6,000 per dwelling unit or 80 percent of the value of each dwelling unit, whichever is less.

Section 18

This section is a purely technical amendment. It reflects the change in title from Federal Housing Administrator to Federal Housing Commissioner, and the fact that the Commissioner is no longer appointed for a specified term of years (which changes were made by Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1947), and also reflects the fact that the basic rate of compensation of the Commissioner is now fixed by other law.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to repeal all except provisions of title I of the Selective Service Act of 1948. I expect to address myself to that subject later.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to repeal all except certain provisions of title I of the Selective Service Act of 1948, introduced by Mr. TAYLOR, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

COMMISSION TO STUDY INTERGOVERNMENTAL FISCAL RELATIONSHIPS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to establish a commission to study intergovernmental fiscal relationships, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me of the bill together with an editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement and editorial presented by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) to establish a commission to study intergovernmental fiscal relationships, introduced by Mr. O'CONOR, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The statement and editorial presented by Mr. O'CONOR were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR

Taxation is a matter uppermost in the minds of many of our people today. They are concerned—vitally concerned—with the octopuslike growth of the taxing systems of the Federal Government, the several States, and of the counties and municipalities. It has been well said that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." Some there are who fear that the current unplanned and undisciplined rush by government on all levels to discover and adopt new ways to attract tax dollars to their coffers may eventually destroy our form of government, unless it is checked.

On many sides today proposed budgets are at all-time highs. States and local governments throughout the land, hard-pressed for revenues to meet the mounting costs of governmental services, are reaching more and more into new tax fields. And the harassed taxpayer is becoming more and more bewildered by the increased assaults from every side on his ever-shrinking income residue.

The entire tax and fiscal situation is in urgent need of revamping. There is an evident lack of consistent planning, and a complete absence of coordination among the various levels of government. The result is widespread overlapping of tax sources, and resultant costly duplication of tax-collection methods and procedures.

All this is unbusinesslike in the extreme. More, it is a tragically serious matter to the millions of workers and businessmen who must pay the piper. With tax collectors from two, three, or sometimes more taxing agencies pulling and hauling at the same taxpayer, collection costs are higher than they ever should be, governmental employee totals are continually rising, and the percentage of the national income going into the Nation's tax coffers keeps ever growing.

It is no far-fetched statement to warn that such hit-and-miss taxation is the Achilles' heel that could bring about the downfall of our American form of government. Certainly it places an undue and exceedingly bitter burden upon the shoulders of every single person in the Nation. Whether he be a resident of city or the most remote rural area, whether he pays his inordinate share of taxation directly or through the countless indirect forms of taxation which have been devised to hide the extent to which Government is reaching into the tills and the pockets of each and every one of us, the result is the same.

During the Eightieth Congress I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 90, to establish a commission to study intergovernmental fiscal relationships. It provided for a national group that would include representatives of the Federal Government, the council of State governments, the conference of mayors, and the American Municipal Association. Preliminary studies have been made of the matter in conjunction with the National Governors Conference, but definite action has not yet resulted.

It is becoming more and more urgent that something be done to correct the abuses of our multiple taxation form of government financing. An editorial from the New York Times of Sunday, January 23, which I ask to be printed in the RECORD as a supplement to my remarks, faces up to the problem squarely. "We shall not solve this problem" the editorial declares, "until it is approached on a national scale, through an official body on which the Federal Government, the States, and the cities are represented." "We urge," the editorial concludes, "that Congress embark on this long-range study by setting up a Commission for tax reform."

I submit herewith, for appropriate reference, a resolution which, in line with Senate Joint Resolution 90, would authorize a national study of intergovernmental fiscal relationships, looking toward the much-desired goal of lower over-all governmental costs.

FOR TAX REFORM

This is the time of year when government on all levels, Federal, State, and municipal, begins looking around for new ways to raise more money in taxes, and we hear faintly, here and there, renewed appeals for reform of the tax structure. Duplication of taxation, as between Federal Government and the States, is, of course, an old, old story. Lately, as cities found their financial lot increasingly difficult, duplication has given way to triplication and the end is not in sight. Within a few months last year the number of cities taxing incomes rose from 3 to 61, and this number has been steadily on the increase since.

The annual conference of governors has long recognized the problem of overlapping taxes. In July 1947, at Salt Lake City, there was an illuminating discussion of it, and general recognition of the grave difficulty of accomplishing reform. Governors Dewey and Driscoll both warned then against expecting an overnight miracle. Mr. Dewey remarked that one difficulty was that all taxing authorities, when confronted with the need of additional revenues, had sought out the goose that squawked the least as its feathers were being pulled.

This process of seeking out new geese to be plucked is now in full swing. Among the several States already mentioned in the news columns as searching for new revenues are California and New York. California's budget will pass the billion-dollar mark for the first time, and Governor Warren is suggesting a higher State sales tax, corporate and personal income taxes, and bank and corporation franchise taxes, as well as a 2-cent cigarette tax, an increased liquor tax, and a higher parimutuel race tax. California is feeling the financial burden of its greatly increased population, and its budget will be higher than any other State's. New York, moving toward a budget that will be nearly a billion dollars, is also going to need more taxes. Two New York legislators have just moved for a State commission study of the overlapping of Federal, State, and local taxes.

But the reservation to the several Government levels of certain fields of taxation, important as it is, is only one phase of the problem. Simplification in methods of collection, reduction of the infinite number of taxes, and relief from the complex, burdensome accounting labor saddled on business, industry, and the individual are equally important. The financial cost and the expenditure of human energy involved in the collection of a dozen different municipal taxes, a dozen State taxes, and on top of that the bewildering variety of Federal taxes are appalling, and they exert their harassing effect on the pay roll of both Government and the business community.

We shall not solve this problem until it is approached on a national scale, through an official body on which the Federal Government, the States, and the cities are represented. All will have to give and take, and if the task is pursued with wisdom a rewarding economy, an increase in productivity, and social gains can be the result. We urge that Congress embark on this long-range study at this session by setting up a commission for tax reform.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR JOINT COMMITTEE ON LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

Mr. MURRAY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10), which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations, created by title IV of the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, is authorized after December 31, 1948, and through February 28, 1949, to incur expenses not to exceed $10,000, which shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers signed by the chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of the disbursements so made.

INVESTIGATION OF THE LIFE-INSURANCE INDUSTRY

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a Senate concurrent resolution to provide for an investigation of the life-insurance industry of the United States.

Representative CELLER, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, is today introducing an identical concurrent resolution.

Congressman CELLER and I have prepared a joint statement on this proposal, and I now ask unanimous consent that this statement, together with the text of the resolution, may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate who are members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives who are members of the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a cochairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee (1) to make a full and complete study and investigation of the life insurance industry of the United States, with particular regard to the applicable antitrust laws and to the extent to which the operations of such industry comply with such laws, and (2) to report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than June 30, 1950, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and other employees, including consultants or firms of consultants, as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or cochairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of the disbursements so made.

The statement presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR M'CARRAN AND REPRESENTATIVE EMANUEL CELLER INTRODUCE IDENTICAL SENATE AND HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS TO ESTABLISH A JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

We are today introducing a joint resolution to provide for an investigation of the life insurance industry of the United States, with particular regard to the applicable antitrust laws and the extent to which the operations of such industry comply with such laws.

The purpose of this investigation is to find facts.

The sheer size of this industry, its dominant position in the world of finance, and the power which it wields and could wield in many fields of endeavor, coupled with the fact that detailed information concerning the operations of the industry is not only greatly lacking but apparently very difficult to secure, give ample ground for this investigation.

While it is contemplated that charges which have been made against the industry will be thoroughly investigated, if this resolution is approved, it is not the intent of the sponsors of the resolution to seek support for any predetermined conclusions. The sole objective is to gather the facts and all the facts, and from the study of those facts, to reach reasonable and fair conclusions. The investigation will be studiously objective and rights of witnesses will be properly and judicially protected.

In connection with this proposed investigation, it will undoubtedly be necessary to consider not only the impact of the Federal antitrust laws upon the life insurance industry, but also the question of the suitability and desirability of Public Law 15 with respect to its application to the life insurance industry, and the further question of whether Public Law 15 requires any modification or amendment. (Public Law 15 provides, among other things that "the business of insurance, and every person engaged therein, shall be subject to the laws of the several States which relate to the regulation or taxation of such business.")

It is contemplated the proposed investigation will be sufficiently broad to encompass an evaluation of State insurance legislation in this field.

A copy of the concurrent resolution follows:

"That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate who are members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives who are members of the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filed in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a cochairman from among its members.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee (1) to make a full and complete study and investigation of the life-insurance industry of the United States, with particular regard to the applicable antitrust laws and to the extent to which the operations of such industry comply with such laws, and (2) to report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than June 30, 1950, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

"SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

"SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and other employees, including consultants or firms of consultants, as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties.

"(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman or cochairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of the disbursements so made."

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE DOCUMENT ENTITLED "RECOMMENDATIONS FOR SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION"

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 35), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Finance 2,400 additional copies of Senate Document Numbered 208, Eightieth Congress, second session, entitled "Recommendations for Social Security Legislation."

INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION OF AGRICULTURAL CROPS

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 36), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the production, means of production, and plans for production of all types of agricultural crops, with particular reference to the fullest possible utilization of the Nation's food, feed, and fiber production, including studies of the construction, location, management, and use of industrial plants for the processing of various farm products. Also including studies in the field of the distribution of farm crops and the methods and costs of transferring the crops from the producer to the consumer. Also including special attention to new uses and the study and development of new uses and markets, both foreign and domestic, for farm crops including further studies in the production, means of production, and plans for production of industrial alcohol, synthetic alcohol, and synthetic rubber and the utilization of all natural materials for such purposes. Also including investigation of the organization or organizations now controlling or seeking to control for the future such alcohol and rubber production, together with the use of patents and processes used in such manufacture, whether developed or owned in whole or in part by foreign companies, corporations, individuals, or agents, and particularly to inquire into the plans and purposes and policies of our governmental agencies with reference to such utilization in the processing and production of industrial alcohol, synthetic alcohol, and synthetic rubber. And the subcommittee is specifically directed to make careful study in all fields of possible expanded use of farm production looking to the fullest possible utilization of farm crops to prevent as far as possible the adverse impact of recurrent surpluses of farm production on our agricultural economy and on the other segments of the Nation's economic structure. For the purpose of this investigation, farm crops include grains, canes, fruits, vegetables, livestock, and livestock products.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable and, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of all agencies in the executive branch of the Government. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $12,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF WATER RESOURCES IN CERTAIN CALIFORNIA COUNTIES

Mr. DOWNEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 37), which was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to make a study and investigation of the water needs and resources of Santa Clara, Alameda, and Contra Costa Counties, Calif., with a view to ascertaining the most feasible means of relieving present shortages in the water supply of such areas for agricultural, industrial, domestic, and other purposes, and to report to the Senate the results of such study and investigation at the earliest practicable date.

INVESTIGATION OF FOREIGN OIL CONCESSIONS TO AMERICAN OIL COMPANIES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution authorizing and directing the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to conduct a full and complete study and investigation of the granting of oil rights and concessions to United States oil companies by foreign governments, and for other purposes.

The resolution (S. Res. 38) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed (1) to conduct a full and complete study and investigation of the granting of oil rights and concessions to United States oil companies by foreign governments and (2) to report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to make a full and complete study of the administration of military justice by courts under the jurisdiction of the armed forces of the United States; and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement describing the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 39), was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the administration of military justice by courts under jurisdiction of the armed forces of the United States in occupied areas, with a view to ascertaining (1) whether the conduct of trials and the treatment of prisoners in cases involving civilians (both citizen and noncitizen) as well as cases involving military personnel have been in accordance with American concepts of justice, and (2) whether any legislation is necessary or desirable for the purpose of improving the operations of such courts. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $ , shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The statement presented by Mr. LANGER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LANGER

The purpose of this resolution is to provide for an inquiry into the type of justice which is being administered by our forces overseas. There are now more than 100,000,000 people outside the United States and its territories who are liable to some sort of prosecution, trial and punishment under the American flag.

These people may be tried and are tried on charges of war crimes, crimes against humanity, and crimes against the occupation forces. All of these charges, in case of conviction, incur heavy penalties.

Yet these courts and courts systems are not subordinate, or have not been so far subordinate, to any regularly established court of the United States. The theater commander in practice has the last word.

As one might expect, in a system so far removed from popular constitution and control, many abuses have crept in. These abuses have been compounded by the hybrid rules of procedure. They combine American, Continental, and Russian rules. As a result their rulings are a far cry from what would be demanded by American standards.

One of the most glaring abuses now exists in Germany. At the American military government court, at Dachau, 1,672 persons were tried as of August 12, 1948; at the time of the latest figures reported by the Department of the Army, 1,416 had been convicted. Two hundred and ninety-seven death sentences were approved. Of these, according to subsequent newspaper reports, 217 have been executed. There remain 39 defendants still under death sentences.

(The Department of the Army reports only 29, and this number has been reduced to 14 by various commutations.)

This sounds like a record of justice done to the criminal members of a criminal conspiracy. But in fact it may well turn out to be, upon investigation, one of the most deplorable miscarriages of justice in history.

A two-man civilian board which made a survey of the trials at the request of Secretary Royall came back to the United States recently and reported.

They said the following methods were used to force confessions:

Beatings and brutal kickings.
Knocking out teeth and breaking jaws.
Mock trials.
Solitary confinement.
Torture with burning splinters.
Posturing as priests.
Very limited rations.
Spiritual deprivation.
Promises of acquittal.

Judge E. LeRoy van Roden, of Media, Pa., and Justice Gordon Simpson, of the Supreme Court of Texas, who composed the Board, recommended to Secretary Royall, after making these shocking discoveries, that a permanent clemency program be started for most of those convicted. They further recommended that 29 of those under death sentences be spared.

With what could be described as blindness or vengeance, but which we will attribute to callousness or negligence, the Army went ahead and hanged six of those for whom mercy had been recommended. Church leaders in Germany and in the United States are aroused about this.

Josef Cardinal Frings, of Cologne; Bishop Neuhaeusler, of Munich; and Bishop Wurm, of Stuttgart, led the protest. Cardinal Frings said the hangings would set back reconciliation between the nations for years.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has pleaded for justice for these people. Their delegation to Attorney General Tom Clark was told that the Department of Justice has no authority in this matter. The American Civil Liberties Union, which is concerned about the case, learned that the charge of using third-degree methods is evidently true and is seeking a way to do something about it.

The Christian Century says the evidence reported so far indicates that American justice as administered by the military is "a disgrace to the United States."

This resolution has been so framed that it could include within its scope cases like that of Mrs. Wilma Ybarbo. She was told by one of our judges in Germany, "When an American leaves the continental United States he leaves the United States Constitution behind." It could also include the case of the GI whose legs were frozen and then amputated after being detained in an Army prison. His case was reported in yestereday's newspapers.

We cannot have a double standard of justice, one brand for us at home and another for export. We must get to the bottom of this shocking deviation from American principle in American occupied areas and we must correct the situation.

INVESTIGATION OF IMMIGRATION LAWS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a Senate resolution relating to an investigation of the immigration laws and the administration thereof, and I ask that the accompanying explanatory statement, together with the text of the resolution, may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 40), submitted by Mr. McCARRAN, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 137, of the Eightieth Congress, agreed to July 26, 1947 (providing for a full and complete investigation of our entire immigration system), is hereby continued during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, and the limit of expenditures under such resolution is hereby increased by $135,000.00.

The statement presented by Mr. McCARRAN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MCCARRAN

Mr. President, I have sent to the desk a resolution extending the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct an investigation of our entire immigration system.

On January 5 of this year, there was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] a progress report (S. Doc. No. 3), which had been made to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary by the Subcommittee to Investigate Immigration and Naturalization pursuant to Senate Resolution 137 of the Eightieth Congress.

It is not my purpose at this time to restate the contents of that progress report, but I should like to comment briefly on the work which has been accomplished so far, and the importance of continuing this study and investigation to a final conclusion.

Right there, Mr. President, may I state that this study and investigation is not, in any sense, a "witch hunt," but on the contrary, is an objective, analytical appraisal of our entire immigration and naturalization system, with the end in view of a comprehensive report and over-all legislation designed to improve the pattern and administration of that system.

WORK THUS FAR ACCOMPLISHED

Pursuant to the direction of the Senate in Senate Resolution 137 of the Eightieth Congress, a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, together with a small staff, has been continuously engaged in assembling facts by means of extensive transcribed inquiries which have been held both in Washington and during the course of various field trips. Several thousand pages of transcribed inquiries have been taken not only from officials and employees of the Government who administer our immigration and naturalization laws but from representatives of a number of nongovernmetal organizations that are interested in our immigration and naturalization system. In addition, there has been acquired a great volume of reports and other statistical data, and considerable independent research work has been completed by the subcommittee staff in the development of background material. Virtually all of this information has now been cataloged for reference in the preparation of a comprehensive report and proposed legislation, and the work of collating the information is now in progress.

The scope of this study includes a great many areas. It includes an appraisal of the operation of our immigration laws, which have been established by not only two comprehensive enactments which are still in effect, but by more than 200 additional laws. It includes a study of the organization and functions of the Visa Division of the Department of State, and of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. These are the two principal agencies dealing with our immigration and naturalization system.

The scope of the study further includes an analysis and appraisal of the various procedures for the admission, exclusion, and deportation of aliens. It includes consideration of the problems of enforcement, and questions relating to illegal entries and aliens who are in an illegal status in the United States. It includes study of the general situation in the United States with respect to the reception and assimilation of aliens.

Each of these areas of study and investigation has several facets, which have been set up as separate projects. Work has now begun on writing up the factual material on some 15 separate projects, and it is expected that the comprehensive report will embrace about 200 projects, which will be integrated in the over-all study.

PROSPECTIVE WORKLOAD AND PERSONNEL NEEDS

Since the war there has been a tremendous increase in the workload of the Standing Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and in view of recent enactments by the Congress, this workload seems sure to be still further increased. As pointed out in the progress report, approximately 1,400 bills relating to immigration and naturalization were introduced in the Eightieth Congress. This was almost two and one-half times as many such bills as were introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and there were introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress almost twice as many such bills as were introduced in the Seventy-eighth Congress. In addition, pursuant to Public Law 863 of the Eightieth Congress, it is anticipated that approximately 15,000 cases in which deportation has been suspended will be referred to the Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee during the present Congress, for affirmative action in each case.

This constantly growing work load has necessitated the use of part of the time of the staff of the investigating subcommittee for processing the work of the standing Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee. The present staff of the investigating subcommittee consists of 10 staff members and 4 stenographers. It is estimated that at least two staff members will be required to process the suspension of deportation cases and that one staff member will be required to process private and general immigration and naturalization bills. In addition, there is an appreciable work load of correspondence and referral items, which together with the general clerical work of the subcommittee staff, will account for the time of one other staff member. It is apparent, therefore, that during the Eighty-first Congress 4 of the 10 subcommittee staff members will be taken away from the study and investigation for the purpose of processing the routine work load of the standing Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee.

The effect of the resolution which I have just introduced is to extend the authority of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary during the life of the Eighty-first Congress, and to authorize an appropriation for the continuation of the work for 1 year from March 1, 1949, the date upon which the present authorization expires.

The last general investigation of our immigration and naturalization system, Mr. President, was made beginning in 1907 and continuing until 1911. This investigation cost more than $800,000 and necessitated the employment of over 200 persons. It is, therefore, apparent that the terms of the resolution which I have just introduced are not only modest, but constitute a bare minimum provision for supporting this important study and investigation. I anticipate that with the addition of 5 or 6 more temporary staff members, the study and investigation, together with the comprehensive report and draft of an omnibus bill, can be completed in approximately 1 year.

AUTOMATIC RECORDING OF SENATE ROLL CALLS AND VOTES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am resubmitting today a resolution previously identified as Senate Resolution 171 of the Eightieth Congress, in which I suggested that the Senate Rules Committee study the possibility of the installation of an automatic voting system in the United States Senate, together with a study of changes in the rules which might be necessitated thereby.

The purpose of this resolution, Mr. President, is obvious. I feel that in view of the staggering work-load confronting this and previous Congresses, it is essential that we use every modern device consistent with good parliamentary government in order to husband our time, which means in effect husbanding the taxpayer's time.

Many of my colleagues come, as I do, from a State wherein one or both houses of the State legislature have automatic voting systems. It seems to me totally incongruous that we in the National Legislature in this atomic age should proceed in the present horse-and-buggy fashion of voting which consumes needless time that might be otherwise used for consideration of important issues of the day.

Of course, I believe that the problem is more serious in the House of Representatives—with its larger membership—than it is in the Senate. But if we attend to this problem of time on our side of Capitol Hill, I am sure that our colleagues in the House will do likewise.

The resolution (S. Res. 41), submitted by Mr. WILEY, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a study (1) of the desirability and feasibility of installing a mechancial or electrical device for automatically recording roll calls and votes of the Senate, and (2) if the installation of such a device is recommended by the committee, of any changes in the Rules of the Senate which might thereby be necessitated.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the results of such study together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, Senate bill 210, which is a bill to retrocede to the State of New Mexico exclusive jurisdiction held by the United States over lands within the boundaries of the Los Alamos project of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, was referred by the President pro tempore of the Senate to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

I have discussed the matter with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] and the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. The Senator from Wyoming has no objection to having the bill referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Therefore, I move that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico, the author of the bill, who is himself a member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, has asked the chairman of the committee to grant consent to this change of reference. I may add that the lands affected were originally taken from the State of New Mexico for the atomic-energy project. The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy is completely familiar with all the facts and details, and can proceed with much more expedition than can the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. So I have no objection to the requested change of reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 210, and it will be referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

PRINTING OF REVIEW OF REPORTS ON SAVANNAH RIVER, GA. AND S. C.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to call a matter to the attention of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from South Carolina.

On March 28, 1946, at the request of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], a resolution was passed requesting certain information from the Army of the United States. On November 26 the Secretary of the Army submitted a report pertaining to a review of the Savannah River in Georgia and South Carolina. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the report be referred to the Committee on Public Works, and printed as a Senate document, with an illustration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR OVERTON

If not, morning business is closed, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

VOLUNTARY RACIAL RELOCATION COMMISSION

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, and ask for its appropriate reference; and I ask unanimous consent that the reading clerk may read the caption and the preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

The bill (S. 708) to establish a Voluntary Racial Relocation Commission, and to prescribe its authority, introduced by Mr. RUSSELL, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading clerk may read the caption and the first section of the bill, explaining its purpose, which are very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 708) to establish a Voluntary Racial Relocation Commission, and to prescribe its authority

Be it enacted, etc., That the purpose of this act is to reduce and eliminate racial tensions and improve the economic status of the American people by equitably distributing throughout the several States those citizens belonging to the two largest racial groups included in the population of the United States who of their own volition desire to change their place of residence. One of the primary objectives of the program provided for by this act shall be to improve the living standards, and the social, economic, and employment opportunities of all of those who may avail themselves of the provisions of this act, thereby assisting the less privileged and improving the standard of living and economic opportunities of all of the people of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill may be printed at this point in the RECORD, and then I desire to address myself briefly to the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 708) is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the purpose of this act is to reduce and eliminate racial tensions and improve the economic status of the American people by equitably distributing through the several States those citizens belonging to the two largest racial groups included in the population of the United States who of their own volition desire to change their place of residence. One of the primary objectives of the program provided for by this act shall be to improve the living standards, and the social, economic, and employment opportunities of all of those who may avail themselves of the provisions of this act, thereby assisting the less privileged and improving the standard of living and economic opportunities of all of the people of the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby established an independent agency to be known as the Voluntary Racial Relocation Commission and to be composed of three members who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate one of the members as chairman, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum. The other two members shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. On the basis of data furnished by the Bureau of the Census, the Commission shall—

(1) determine the two largest racial groups in the United States having separate and distinct racial characteristics, and

(2) from time to time determine the number of persons attributable to each of such groups per thousand population of each State, and per thousand population of the United States as a whole.

The number of persons attributable to either of such racial groups per thousand population of any State shall be considered to be below normal if less than 95 percent, or above normal if more than 105 percent of the number of persons attributable to such group per thousand population of the United States as a whole.

SEC. 4. The Commission shall formulate and effectuate a program to encourage and assist persons who are members of either of such racial groups and who desire to take advantage of the provisions of this act to move from States where members of their racial group are above normal and to relocate in States where members of their racial group are below normal. Insofar as may be possible, the Commission shall equalize the number assisted to move from, and the number assisted to move to, each State. Such program shall not be made applicable to any State which shall not have given its assent thereto. Such assent may be given either by action of the State legislature or in writing by the Governor of the State.

SEC. 5. In effectuating such program the Commission shall have the authority, within the limits of funds made available, to—

(a) make or insure loans for, or otherwise assist in financing, the transportation, subsistence, housing, establishment in business or occupations, acquisition of land, or other costs necessary to the relocation and reestablishment of the persons assisted. Such loans or financing shall be made at such interest rates and upon such security and terms and conditions as will best tend to effectuate such program and will afford a reasonable prospect of repayment;

(b) make arrangements for, and provide at reasonable rates, suitable transportation, subsistence, and housing for persons assisted;

(c) make grants, where necessary, for the transportation, subsistence, and temporary housing of persons assisted; and

(d) provide for the employment of persons assisted in agriculture, industry, commerce, public projects, or in any other business or occupation in which there is a fair likelihood of the person assisted achieving success.

The Commission shall endeavor to see that the housing and living facilities of any family which may be assisted to relocate are superior to those enjoyed by such family before it availed itself of such program, and that the employment or business opportunities of each person assisted are greater than those available to such person prior to relocation. The Commission is specifically empowered to make contracts with industrial enterprises and other persons, firms, and corporations affording employment to persons assisted, and is authorized to make loans to any such employer in an amount not exceeding $10,000 for each such person employed by such employer.

SEC. 6. The Commission is authorized to utilize the services of any agency of the Federal Government or of any State government which may assist in effectuating the purposes of this act, and to make such delegations of authority as the Commission may deem necessary and desirable. The Commission is further authorized to take all steps necessary or desirable to promote the effective execution of the program provided for by this act and to protect the health and promote the welfare of persons assisted under such program.

SEC. 7. The Commission may, within the limit of funds which may be made available, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees in accordance with the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books and books of reference, and for paper, printing, and binding), as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. In carrying out the provisions of this act, the Commission may sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal.

SEC. 8. For carrying out the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, the sum of $500,000,000, and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years the sum of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the report of the President's Commission on Civil Rights and his subsequent endorsement of that report have made a national political issue of social, racial, and economic problems which have, for more than 80 years, unfairly burdened that section of the Nation generally called the South. The recommendations of the Commission and the legislation necessary to implement them are in the main admittedly directed at the Southern States. Taken altogether they propose to revolutionize the social and political relations between the whites and the Negroes in the 11 States of the South in order to make them conform to a national pattern.

The avowed objective of the program is to destroy the system of segregating the races which exists in the South. This system of segregation is the basis of a social order which has been painfully created through a process of trial and error—over a period of 83 years, by people of both races—at a time when they were beset by difficulties which are incomprehensible to those living in other sections of the Nation.

The term "civil rights," as used in the report of the Commission and in American political discussion today, means the question of Negro rights, racial relations, and the solution of a racial problem. The whole program of the Commission propounds and supports the theory that any form of segregation or any restraints upon the freest intermingling of the races in all of the relations of life is an illegal discrimination against our Negro citizens and a denial of their civil rights.

Many of the leaders who have inspired and promoted this program are frank enough to admit that striking down all segregation of the races in every form will have the eventual effect of solving the racial problem of the United States once and for all by bringing about the amalgamation and absorption of the minority Negro race by the more numerous white race. I do not see how any rational thinker can escape a similar conclusion.

The majority of the people of the South believe in their present social order based on segregation. They abhor the idea of solving the racial problem by amalgamation. They consider this to be the mongrelization of both races, and they are unalterably opposed to such a solution. They therefore have opposed and continue to oppose each and every piece of legislation which will contribute in any degree to that end. The rest of the Nation, constituting a majority of our people, appear to be either indifferent to the certain final result of the program or to favor it or to favor legislative action which will eventually bring about such results.

Mr. President, I have long been aware of the fact that an opinion of a person living in a community where from 1 to 5 percent of the population are Negroes as to what constitutes a proper pattern of relations between the white and Negro races is almost certain to be quite different from that held by a person living in a community where 40 to 50 or even 60 or 70 percent of the population are Negroes. The feeling on the question of segregating the races in separate schools—to use an illustration which is dramatized in the report of the Civil Rights Commission—varies in intensity in accordance with differences in the percentage of the members of each race living in the area affected. The degree of feeling varies even as between the Southern States, in accordance with the percentage of the population of the State that happens to be Negro. The bitterness engendered over the proposal to solve the racial problem of the country by fixing a Nation-wide pattern in Washington is much more acute in Mississippi, with 49 percent Negro population, and South Carolina, with 43 percent Negro population, than it is in North Carolina and Florida, with lower percentages of 27, respectively. It is more marked in Florida and North Carolina than in Texas, with 14 percent Negro population.

The 11 Southern States most acutely affected by the proposed civil-rights program have a total population, according to the last census, of 31,831,026. This is approximately 24 percent of the total population of the United States. It will be noted, however, that these same 11 States have more than 75 percent of all the Negroes living in the United States. Out of a total of 12,865,518 Negroes, according to the last census, 8,878,912 of them live in the 11 States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and Texas. It is true, Mr. President, that the war brought shifts in our population, as people of both races sought to better their economic lot by moving to areas where war industries were located and higher wages abounded, but the figures which I have given are the latest accurate ones available, and the proportions and percentages cited are very nearly accurate today. Not only do we have the greater part of the Negro population of the United States, but there are any number of counties and subdivisions of Government in the Southern States where the Negroes outnumber the whites.

To make clear the great impact the adoption of the program to destroy the system of segregation in the South will have upon the life of the people of that section, I offer for the record a table showing the number of counties and parishes in the 11 Southern States having a high percentage of Negro population. It will be noted that there are 182 counties in these States where the Negro population outnumbers the white. I ask that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Table showing percentage distribution of Negro population by counties or parishes in southern States (beginning with counties or parishes having 30% or more Negroes)

| State | Total number of counties | Number of counties having Negro population equal to or greater than the indicated percentage | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|

| Arkansas | 75 | 9 | 6 | 5 | 4 | 1 | --- | --- | 9 |
| Florida | 67 | 19 | 8 | 2 | 1 | --- | --- | --- | 3 |
| Georgia | 159 | 31 | 25 | 22 | 17 | 6 | --- | --- | 45 |
| Louisiana | 64 | 16 | 12 | 7 | 6 | 2 | --- | --- | 15 |
| Mississippi | 82 | 13 | 12 | 13 | 5 | 15 | 2 | --- | 35 |
| North Carolina | 100 | 19 | 22 | 7 | 2 | --- | --- | --- | 9 |
| South Carolina | 46 | 6 | 10 | 7 | 12 | 3 | --- | --- | 22 |
| Tennessee | 95 | 4 | 1 | --- | 1 | 1 | --- | --- | 2 |
| Texas | 254 | 15 | 9 | 3 | --- | --- | --- | --- | 3 |
| Virginia | 124 | 17 | 17 | 11 | 6 | 1 | --- | --- | 18 |
| Total | 1,133 | 161 | 129 | 84 | 54 | 36 | 5 | --- | 179 |

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the great unbalance in the number of Negroes in these 11 States, as compared with the rest of the Nation, as well as the threat to the system of segregation of the races which is an integral part of southern life, are facts which any fair-minded man should take into consideration if he would understand the grave concern which these proposals have caused the southern people.

This concern has engendered great bitterness, which might easily grow into racial strife. The campaign for what are euphemistically called civil rights is planting seeds of disunity when our Nation needs to be united. Whether rightly or wrongly, the people who live where the two races are most evenly divided in numbers are strongly opposed to having imposed upon them the racial pattern which the remainder of the Nation, constituting a large majority of our population, seems determined to fix for the entire Nation by Federal laws.

If the rest of the Nation is determined to force their views upon the southern people and use the Federal power to revolutionize the social and political relations between the races in the South, destroying the social order in which our people believe, common fairness would demand that they assist in equalizing our racial problem with that of the rest of the Nation. This will enable those who believe in the program to make a contribution to its success and fulfillment equal to that which they propose to require of us who oppose it. It would be manifestly unfair and un-American for the rest of the country to compel the white people of the South, by Federal fiat, to associate in the most intimate relations of life, with and perhaps eventually absorb, a much higher proportion of Negroes than they themselves will have an opportunity to accept and absorb.

The bill is presented in the belief that its enactment offers more hope for a permanent and peaceable solution of the grave social and political issues growing out of the race problem than any other suggested. It proposes the creation of a commission whose duty it is to encourage and assist individuals and families who voluntarily desire to do so to relocate throughout the Nation in such a way as to accomplish an equitable distribution of the largest racial groups comprising our population.

This bill should strongly appeal to all social-minded people. It assures that in the process of bringing about an equitable distribution of the Negro and white races as between the States and sections of the Nation, it will at the same time lift the living standards and improve the economic and employment opportunities of several million American citizens who have heretofore been disadvantaged as compared with their fellow citizens. The Commission is charged with the duty of seeing, and I quote from the bill, "that the housing and living facilities of any family which may be assisted to relocate are superior to those enjoyed by such family before it availed itself of such program, and that the employment or business opportunities of each person assisted are greater than those available to such person prior to relocation."

The powers of the Commission to assist in obtaining employment extend to the authority to make loans in an amount not exceeding $10,000 for each person relocated who has secured a better job with the borrower than he enjoyed before his relocation. This provision of the bill not only will help equitably distribute the population, but will assist in a more general diffusion of the industry of the Nation. It will contribute to the establishment of plants in many States which now have little industry. If the purposes of the measure are finally accomplished and the work of the Commission created therein succeeds, Negroes who of their own accord desire to avail themselves of the benefits and opportunities of this bill will be distributed on a basis of approximately 10 percent in each State. In like manner, white people from the States now having an unbalance of white population will enjoy better economic opportunities if they desire to locate in the States from which the Negroes are moved, in the shift to equalize the population of these States.

It is, of course, impossible to give any data on the racial composition of the several States without knowing how many people of each race the Commission will be able to relocate. I do, however, offer for the RECORD a table which would show the distribution by States of those belonging to the white and Negro races if the population were already divided equitably. I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Table showing racial and total population of the States and 10 percent of total population (based on 1940 Federal census, Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census)

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Georgia will yield, in view of the fact that I must leave the Chamber. I have a report that affects the Senator's State.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be through with my remarks in about 4 minutes, if the Senator will indulge me.

Mr. President, there has been a time when the plan envisaged by this bill would have been regarded as radical or revolutionary. Today when we look about the globe and see the gigantic scale on which the United States is using its wealth and resources to solve the problems of the people of the earth who live in foreign lands, this relocation of a million and a half American families becomes comparatively a minor matter. The cost is small compared to the great benefits which will accrue. When we consider that such a law will effect a permanent solution to a problem which divides the Nation, consumes the time and energies of the Members of Congress, creates bitterness and threatens strife, the cost is not at all significant.

We have appropriated stupendous sums of money to rehabilitate the peoples of Europe. We have assisted in the relocation of millions of people and are today engaged in bringing thousands of displaced persons to our country. At a small fraction of the cost and effort we are expending in our effort to straighten out the rest of the world, we can alleviate the gravest domestic issue which confronts and disturbs our people today, and at the same time greatly strengthen our economy.

When this movement to distribute the two races equally is once well started, it will almost operate itself. Other social measures which are pending in the Congress may be used to expedite the movement. For example, we are proposing legislation whereby the Federal Government is to assist in the construction of millions of new homes. Through an agreement between the Relocation Commission and the Housing Administration, a certain proportion of these new homes can be made available to those assisted by this bill. We are planning vast public works projects in every section of the Nation. Through agreements with the contractors on these projects we can assure employment for large numbers of people on the project and the Government can then give many of them jobs to operate the completed project. Industry and business are complaining today about the difficulties they encounter in borrowing money with which to expand and modernize their plants. The loans provided for could be secured from the Commission on agreement to employ those who have relocated residence under the terms of this proposed act.

Mr. President, one of the last measures introduced in the Senate before the distinguished Senator from Kentucky was translated into the Vice Presidency of the United States was a bill which he introduced, Senate bill 529, in conjunction with 18 other Senators, a bill to promote maximum employment, business opportunities, and careers in a free competitive economy. The organization which this bill proposes to establish can be utilized to effect the objectives of the bill I offer.

In the very nature of things, those at the bottom of the economic ladder will be the first to avail themselves of the opportunities for improvement which this law will proffer them. We will be bettering the economic status of a million and a half or two million of the most underprivileged families of our land, white and Negro. We will strengthen America and take a long step toward the abolition of poverty from our national life.

If the Commission appointed by the President is reasonably prudent in its administration of this act, there is no reason why most of the moneys appropriated and loaned should not be repaid. There is no doubt in my mind that, in proportion, the money recaptured from these loans will be much greater than that collected from foreign nations on advances heretofore made or now in process.

The passage of this bill will be a great contribution to the preservation of the rights of the States and of our American form of government. Without impugning the motives of thousands of Americans who are supporting the civil rights program, we know that it has also been seized upon by subversive elements who seek to sow discord in the land and those who seek, by generating sympathy with what is regarded as a humanitarian cause, to establish state socialism in these United States.

Mr. President, I have no pride of authorship in this bill. I will gladly support legislation coming from any other source which will accomplish the desired purpose. I would that a Senator from some other section had offered this measure.

I hasten to assure the Senate that this bill cannot be construed as being a belated demand for a Marshall plan or an ECA to restore the ravages of civil war or to assist the Southern States to achieve their desire for readmission to economic equality with our sister States. It is offered in a sincere effort to assure domestic tranquility and national betterment. It will not help the underprivileged of the South, or the South as a section, any more than it will benefit the disadvantaged of other areas and the economy of the Nation as a whole. It will appeal to all fair-minded persons who believe in equality and justice.

In our expensive quest for peace and the happiness of men everywhere, let us not neglect measures necessary to assure the peace and happiness of the people of the United States. The plan proposed is workable. The monetary cost will be inconsequential. In the best American tradition it seizes upon the solution of a grave and perplexing problem as a means of moving forward and improving the status of the American people.

CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is the call of the calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF JAMES E. WEBB TO BE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to move that, as in executive session, the Senate consider the nomination of Mr. James E. Webb to be Under Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator moving that the Senate go into executive session?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I am moving that the Senate consider the nomination as in executive session. I ask unanimous consent that that be done, if that is the way to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the Senate consider the nomination of James E. Webb, of North Carolina, to be Under Secretary of State. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the clerk will state the nomination.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James E. Webb to be Under Secretary of State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is very necessary that Mr. Webb be confirmed at an early date because of the importance of the functions of the office of Under Secretary. Of course, he has not yet entered upon the duties of the office.

I beg to report that the Committee on Foreign Relations has had the nomination before it, and has given it thorough consideration, and the committee voted unanimously to recommend that the nomination be confirmed.

I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks a biographical sketch of Mr. Webb which sets forth his experience and his training be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the sketch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CONNALLY. I also ask to have included in the RECORD a letter from the President in reply to one from Mr. Robert A. Lovett, who retired from the position of Under Secretary of State, together with Mr. Lovett's letter in the same connection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 7, 1949.

MY DEAR BOB: I have received with heartfelt regret your letter of January 3. Because of my familiarity with the personal considerations which prompt it, I have no recourse but to comply with its terms and accept your resignation as the Under Secretary of State, effective January 20, 1949.

In taking this action I need hardly assure you as you return to private pursuits that I heartily reciprocate the personal sentiments of friendship and respect which you express.

You have earned the gratitude of the Nation for outstanding service. As Special Assistant to the Secretary of War and as Assistant Secretary of War for Air, you had gained invaluable experience before I called you to assume the intricate responsibilities of the office of the Under Secretary of State.

The country has been fortunate in having the benefit of your expert abilities in peace as well as in war. You have been guided and inspired through all of your varied service by the highest intellectual integrity and you have brought to each task untiring industry, outstanding ability, and selfless devotion to the public interest.

Although you must now relinquish public office, I shall like to think that we can call upon you from time to time for the advice and counsel which you can give out of your rich experience.

With every good wish,

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

---

JANUARY 3, 1949.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For personal reasons with which you are familiar, I respectfully submit my resignation as Under Secretary of State.

I thank you most sincerely for the confidence you have reposed in me and for your unfailing consideration and kindness.

With great respect and deep appreciation, I am,

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT A. LOVETT.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I wish to add a word of approval to the unanimous report of the Foreign Relations Committee in recommending the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. James E. Webb, as Under Secretary of State. Mr. Webb is a young man of broad experience, unusual capacity, and eminent qualifications for this important position. He is schooled in the best American traditions and ideas, and has a background of public service and experience in official and economic matters which will enable him to serve the State Department and the Nation.

Mr. Webb is the finest product of our civilization. North Carolina feels a peculiar pride in his record of achievements and accomplishments, and has the utmost confidence in his ability, courage, intelligence, and integrity, and his thorough and complete devotion and loyalty to his country under all circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of James E. Webb, of North Carolina, to be Under Secretary of State?

The nomination was confirmed.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, for the Committee on Armed Services, I ask unanimous consent to report unanimously many routine promotions in the Army and Navy which have accumulated during the recess of the Congress. I think immediate action on the nominations is very desirable at this time because of our situation in Europe and in Asia, as well as at home.

I ask unanimous consent that I may report the nominations, and that they be considered immediately, that they be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified forthwith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. May I ask the Senator from Maryland whether the nominations were all approved unanimously by the committee, and were considered carefully by the committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. They were.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. And there is reason for putting them into effect immediately?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is. They are all provided for by law. They are purely routine.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the chairman of the committee know of any objection from any Senator about any nomination?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not a single objection to a single nomination was received by the committee as to any of the promotions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, as in executive session, the report of the nominations will be received, and without objection the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified at once.

VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS IN INDUSTRY, ETC.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I renew my unanimous-consent request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 547, which is the bill to extend the authority of the President regarding voluntary agreements.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I am informed that one of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency has an amendment to offer to the bill, and I should like to have an opportunity to have it printed. I shall have no objection to having the bill brought up on Monday, if the majority leader so indicates. I should most respectfully object to having the bill brought up at this time.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask the majority leader if he would have any objection to making the bill the first order of business on Monday.

Mr. LUCAS. The majority leader has no objection to making the bill the first order of business on Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to making the bill the unfinished business to be considered following the routine morning business on Monday next? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF STORM-STRICKEN AREAS IN THE WEST

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am about to ask unanimous consent to submit a unanimous report from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and to request the immediate consideration of a bill to provide for relief for the snow-bound States of the West. I should like to state the supreme gravity of the problem to which we are addressing ourselves.

First, Mr. President, I send forward to the desk a unanimous report of the Committee on Interior on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) introduced at the last session of the Congress by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] on behalf of the Senators from Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Montana, and Wyoming, being Report No. 24. The joint resolution is designed to provide relief for the snow-bound States of the West. The unanimous report urgently recommends the passage of the resolution.

Since the introduction of the joint resolution conditions have become even more grave than they were then. The blizzard, of which we have all been reading in the press, extends from South Dakota and Nebraska to the Pacific coast. There has been an extraordinary fall of snow accompanied by subzero temperatures and high winds, resulting in the Rocky Mountain States in a disaster which exceeds anything within the memory of any living person.

The conditions were so bad, Mr. President, that the Department of the Interior, through the Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Reclamation, at the request of State authorities, has been making available to the States and the counties the road equipment owned by those agencies, in order to open and keep open the snow-covered areas so that feed might be taken to isolated herds of cattle and sheep. The Army, the United States Air Force, and other agencies have cooperated. This work was done with the consent and knowledge, indeed, I may say, by the order of the President, who out of his disaster fund allocated the sum of $100,000, part of it being allocated for the relief of Indians in the snow-bound States. An additional allocation was made yesterday.

Mr. President, the committee held a hearing, at which representatives of all the agencies which are cooperating were present, the Federal Works Agency, the Bureau of Public Roads, and the Bureau of Forestry, in the Department of Agriculture, and the armed services. The committee also consulted the Bureau of the Budget. I have here a letter from the executive assistant to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, which I shall submit later, together with letters from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior. In its present form the joint resolution authorizes the expenditure of $750,000.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be taken up for immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 38, which will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) to authorize the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, and other agencies of the Government to break through snow-bound areas in the western range States, and to take other necessary action to move in supplemental feed and otherwise care for livestock isolated by storms which have created an emergency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, am I to understand that this joint resolution in substance authorizes and legalizes the expenditure of funds which have already been spent?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; it is to save these agencies from violation of the anti-deficiency law, on account of the utilization they have made of their machinery and their personnel, their gasoline and their oil, in fighting this terrific storm.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read a letter from Mr. Lawton expressing the approval of the Bureau of the Budget of the enactment of the joint resolution.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, before the letter is read at the desk, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I should like to know if the measure has been coordinated with the action taken today by the House of Representatives. The Senator from Wyoming and all other Senators from the section of the country affected by the heavy snowstorms know that we must expedite whatever action we are going to take, because the help which is afforded next week or 2 weeks from now will not be anywhere near as good or effective as help given right now. I am informed that the House of Representatives has passed an appropriation measure, House Joint Resolution 112, giving to the President disaster relief funds in an additional amount of $500,000. That is almost as much as is authorized in the joint resolution which is now before the Senate. If we want to take quick action, I ask the Senator from Wyoming, would it not be wise to suggest to the Senate now that the fair thing to do would be to pass the appropriation measure which the House passed today? Then possibly we could later pass the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Wyoming, and reimburse the agencies of Government. I am sure the Senator from Wyoming is informed as to what action the House has taken.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, with whom I have recently had a conference, is, I understand, planning to hold a meeting of the Appropriations Committee this afternoon, at either 1:30 or 2 o'clock, to pass upon the appropriation measure referred to. But I may say that that appropriation is altogether separate and distinct from the action proposed by the joint resolution now before us. It is true that the President had to draw upon his disaster funds in order to meet a part of the distress occasioned by these snowstorms, and the measure passed by the House, and to be considered by the Senate Appropriations Committee this afternoon, is intended merely to reimburse the President's disaster fund.

I may say to the Senator from South Dakota that the Geological Survey, to which I addressed an inquiry this morning, has advised me that the fall of snow in the Columbia Basin, for example, is already much greater than that which caused the disaster of a year ago.

The two things are separate and distinct. The President's disaster fund may be used for any purpose. The small allocations of $200,000 or $300,000 for the Bureau of Public Works, for the Indians, for relief in connection with the western blizzard, has depleted the disaster fund which can be used for any disaster—flood, or snow, or earthquake, or fire, or any of the disasters with which we are all familiar. So I hope that the Senate will proceed to pass the joint resolution immediately, and then when the Senate Committee on Appropriations has acted upon the other measure, take that up.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I certainly hope that the request of the Senator from Wyoming will be granted, and the joint resolution passed. I do not want to delay its passage one single moment. But I want to present this fact. The question which has arisen today points up the need for permanent disaster relief legislation and permanent disaster relief funds. If we were not in session right now we would have exactly the same situation as to these areas which have been so terribly affected by the heavy and unprecedented fall of snow, that we had in my State a year and a half ago when a disastrous flood came on, and when, in the absence of a session of Congress at the time, we found ourselves rather powerless and hopeless insofar as finding any substantial funds that could be made available to relieve the distress, or any machinery to which we could turn.

And while I hope that this legislation will be immediately passed to bring relief to the areas where it is so badly needed, I do hope that the passage of this and similar measures from time to time to deal with any specific disaster should not obscure our minds from the consideration of the necessity for permanent disaster relief legislation and permanent disaster relief machinery, created to be ready and available to deal with the disasters wherever they arise, and whenever they arise, and without having to wait so that some regions months later can have their vital affairs come to the attention of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

I certainly recognize the fact that these terrible problems have no regional application, no political application, and that simply because of human distress and suffering the legislation will immediately be passed, but I hope that then we shall immediately proceed to do the long-time over-all job which has been so long necessary, to set up adequate machinery to deal with these recurring disasters.

BUDGET BUREAU VIEW

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I quite agree with what the Senator from Florida has said. I had sent to the desk a letter from Mr. Lawton, of the Bureau of the Budget, and if the Senator from Nevada will just withhold his statement for a moment, I think it will be well to have the letter brought before the Senate so that it may know that in presenting this joint resolution the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has secured the cooperation of the Bureau of the Budget and the agencies involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1949.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have reviewed Senate Joint Resolution 38 authorizing agencies of the Government to use existing funds to meet emergencies created by unprecedented weather conditions in the Western States and providing for reimbursement of funds spent on this account. Government agencies in the affected areas have, to the extent of their ability, furnished aid and assistance to the States and local communities to alleviate hardship and suffering caused by these storms and avert the loss of human life and the destruction of great numbers of livestock. This has, of course, put an unexpected drain on the funds available to the agencies and it is urgently necessary to make immediate authorization for restoration of those appropriations.

In addition, the President has today recommended a supplemental appropriation for $1,000,000 for his disaster relief fund. This fund will be used to directly aid States and local communities and in taking further steps toward meeting the present emergency. It is not a substitute for the provisions for Senate Joint Resolution 38, but represents aid and assistance to the States over and above that which is already being rendered by Federal agencies.

In order to permit agencies to continue to carry on the types of aid which they have been rendering in this emergency, it is necessary that they be given immediate assurance that funds will be made available to meet the expenditures that they have already incurred. Senate Joint Resolution 38 would do this.

Sincerely yours,

F. J. LAWTON,
Executive Assistant.

STATEMENT FROM INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter of this date, addressed to me, from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, may be printed at this point in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 27, 1949.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: The blizzard disaster in the West is still developing in some sections and new information of critical conditions that have existed for several days is being received almost hourly. The storms that have swept the region repeatedly since December 22 are without precedent since the white man has penetrated the high plains and intermountain areas.

The Department of the Interior put all of its field services in the Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, and Colorado areas on an emergency basis nearly a week ago and in several localities the Bureau of Land Management had been working on an emergency basis since January 1. I have instructed all of our agencies to respond in real disaster areas with men and equipment, where they are available, on the request of the local disaster committees that have been set up. On most of these committees, representatives of our field forces serve as members.

It will be necessary later to submit to the Congress detailed reports and justifications for estimates to cover the extraordinary expenditures that we have made. The size of the expenditures to date in this work may exceed $500,000. There were still 25 towns of 50 to 200 population isolated in Utah yesterday, but generally the main roads were open in the areas of heaviest snowfall yesterday afternoon. However, reports this morning indicate that blowing snow has closed them in some of the winter-range areas and the work is to be done over again. Also, the 5-day forecast of the Weather Bureau at Billings is for another general blizzard which may be expected at any time and which, if it follows the pattern of those that we have already experienced, may cover the entire storm-bound area.

Even if the remainder of the winter is no more severe than normal, the expenditures of this Department alone can be expected to reach several millions of dollars to meet the emergency that has already been created. I hestitate to anticipate what might be the requirement if the remainder of the winter, which by the calendar is still young, should be as severe as the month that has passed.

Real suffering is being recorded in several Indian reservation areas. A sudden recent storm deposited 40 inches on the western part of the Navajo Reservation. The extent of the disaster there still is not known. We have urgent demands for allocation of funds at Fort Berthold and Turtle Mountain in North Dakota with all funds exhausted, but are determined to meet these instances of dire need approaching catastrophe with diverted funds.

I sincerely hope that the Congress in its desire to assist in the rapidly moving and quickly developing emergency will not fix ceilings so low as to enforce curtailment of the activities of the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Bureau of Reclamation which have prevented the disaster so far from wiping out herds and flocks and ranchers in several States. While I am not presuming to speak for other departments, I would like to point out that several agencies of the Department of Agriculture and the armed services have responded, as have our agencies, in the disaster areas and that their work undoubtedly has utilized funds that were programed for other regular activities. These expenditures should be calculated as well in any summation of the allotments to be covered by legislation. The President's emergency fund now has been virtually exhausted. Its use was designed primarily for other purposes, such as supplementing the resources of local communities that had exhausted their funds and facilities. The need of our Department should not be confused with the need for restoring and supplementing the emergency disaster fund.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM E. WARNE,
Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. I wish to clarify the remarks which the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] has just made. It will be remembered that last year the subject of a disaster fund for the President was debated on the floor of the Senate, and that the Columbia River disaster was the reason for the recommendation. The subcommittee of the Public Works Committee of which I was chairman, not only made money available for relief of those affected by the disaster on the Columbia River, but recommended a permanent fund of $500,000 for a revolving fund or a fund which was subject to allocation by the President in emergencies. The only debate on this floor was whether or not we should designate the agency which would expend the fund in case of disaster, or leave such designation to the President. It was decided to leave such designation to the President of the United States which agency would be in charge of expending the fund, and he has now designated the Public Works Administration in this case.

Mr. President, as chairman of the committee of western Senators chosen to follow through in coordinating the work of relief in the snow-bound areas of the six States of Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, and Utah, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point communications, including wires, letters, and memoranda received in that connection.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ELY, NEV., January 22, 1949.

Hon. Senator GEORGE MALONE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Eastern and central Nevada suffering from worst storm conditions in years. Livestock situation approaching disaster condition. Seventy thousand sheep in critical condition. These will have to be shipped out or stock will die. Over 100,000 sheep involved. Thirty-five thousand in critical condition; 50,000 jeopardized. Loss continuing daily. Will need feed and forage. Stockmen anticipate 50-percent loss, unless feed forthcoming at once. Deepest snow in years with high winds. All available snow-removal equipment, including large crawler tractors, unable to cope with the drifting snow on roads that have been open in last few days. Equipment has not been able to reach outlying stretches of county roads. Standard snow equipment cannot cope with situation. Need heavy tractors, trucks, and funds to break roads so that feed convoys can reach sheep and cattle herds. County commissioners, State highway and Government agency officials estimate future emergency needs if conditions get worse $100,000 to keep present equipment operating. County funds almost exhausted. All private and government agencies assisting with all means and equipment available, but lack funds for operation of equipment. Estimated cost for feed relief $200,000 in next 30 days. Five hundred thousand dollars estimated emergency funds needed by spring if present conditions continue. Some families and ranchers still isolated.

Emergency Relief Comittee, consisting of United Stockmen's Association, Nevada Woolgrowers' Association, United States Department of Agriculture Council, White Pine Soil Conservation District Supervisors, Nevada Grazing Districts 4 and 5, Advisory Board, Nevada National Forest Advisory Committee, White Pine County Farm Bureau, Commissioners, White Pine County.

George Swallow says there is going to be 50-percent loss of stock in White Pine, Lincoln, parts of Nye and Eureka and it will be even heavier if new storm comes. Gordon Griswold unreachable today, but our Elko correspondent says Elko County in fair shape. Ranchers there have been collecting hay and concentrates in expectation of such conditions.

Vernon Metcalfe says that entire country east of Eureka is going to be hit hard. Western part of State is in good shape but ranchers aren't taking any chances and are starting to bring stock off winter ranges and close to home ranches. Swallow says that unless feed is shipped in quick or stock shipped out fast, losses are going to be even heavier. Jack Fogliani at Caliente says situation is tough in Lincoln County. Cliff Jones as Acting Governor has declared emergency so that State Highway Department and other agencies and National Guard as well can use all their equipment and facilities without delay or red tape.

Tried another check late this afternoon but couldn't reach Swallow for latest outlook. Our Ely man says there is nothing encouraging in sight. Regards.

JOHN SANFORD.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1949.—Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, Nevada, today called together the Senators of the six intermountain States—Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming—on a definite plan of cooperation with the governors of their respective States in the storm emergency in moving feed and livestock in the area. A subcommittee including Senators GEORGE W. MALONE, Nevada, chairman; LESTER C. HUNT, Wyoming, and ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah, was chosen to follow through and contact the railroads serving the area in the matter of emergency rates in moving such feed and livestock; to enlist Government agency cooperation including the Army, Federal roads, and other agencies in furnishing manpower and equipment in clearing roads and trails; and to prepare resolution to be introduced in Senate Monday, January 24, to provide for a deficiency appropriation for the Bureau of Land Management under the Secretary of the Interior for funds expended under certain conditions in clearing trails and transporting feed and livestock in the emergency area.

"The committee today wired the governors of the States in the mountain area for further particulars as to the extent of the emergency and for their definite recommendations.

"Gov. Vail Pittman, of Nevada, who is here attending the Presidential inauguration, was called into the meeting by Senator MALONE and explained in detail the situation in Nevada which is comparable with that in Utah and to a somewhat lesser degree in the other States.

JANUARY 24, 1949.

MEMORANDUM TO SENATOR GLEN H. TAYLOR, IDAHO; SENATOR BERT H. MILLER, IDAHO; SENATOR PATRICK M'CARRAN, NEVADA; SENATOR GEORGE W. MALONE, NEVADA; SENATOR ELBERT D. THOMAS, UTAH; SENATOR ARTHUR V. WATKINS, UTAH; SENATOR EDWIN C. JOHNSON, COLORADO; SENATOR EUGENE D. MILLIKIN; COLORADO; SENATOR JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, WYOMING; SENATOR LESTER C. HUNT, WYOMING; SENATOR JAMES E. MURRAY, MONTANA; SENATOR ZALES N. ECTON, MONTANA

The emergency conference of western Senators held in the Interior and Insular Committee room (224), called by Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, of Nevada, in response to urgent messages from the storm areas, for 2:30 p. m. on Friday, January 21, decided:

1. To introduce a Senate resolution to be prepared by Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, and ARTHUR V. WATKINS, of Utah, authorizing the Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Public Roads, and all other Government agencies to render whatever assistance possible in the transportation of feed and livestock and in clearing the roads and trails for such transportation, including the assurance of a deficiency appropriation for money expended within certain limits.

2. To contact the railroads serving the area and determine the possibility of securing emergency freight rates in the transportation of such feed and livestock—60 percent of the regular rate was discussed.

3. To wire each of the governors of the six States for further details as to the extent of the emergency and just what in their opinion would be necessary in the way of such emergency help and assistance.

4. To contact the Federal agencies in working out the details as to just what help can be rendered in this connection.

The subcommittee selected to follow through consisted of Senator GEORGE W. MALONE, of Nevada, chairman, Senator ARTHUR V. WATKINS, of Utah, and Senator LESTER C. HUNT, of Wyoming.

The wires were sent to the governors on Saturday afternoon and as yet very little information has been secured, probably for the reason that the governors would not be able to do anything officially until this morning, Monday.

The presidents of the railroads serving the area were contacted. Some information has already been received and while not particularly favorable to date, they are working on the problem. The committee will meet with Mr. Edwin Martin, representative for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad and Mr. Howard Blatchard, representative for the Union Pacific Railroad, today and further information will be forthcoming.

Emergency meetings are being held in the Department of Agriculture and other departments of the Government and we are to be kept advised.

We have been in communication with Mr. John Steelman at the White House who is working on the matter and will keep us advised.

The committee will keep you advised as the information comes in and progress is made.

All the Senators in the six States were notified of the conference and the following attended: Idaho: Mr. James H. Hawley, representing Senator BERT H. MILLER; Nevada: Senator GEORGE W. MALONE; Utah: Senator ELBERT D. THOMAS, Senator ARTHUR V. WATKINS; Colorado: Senator EDWIN C. JOHNSON; Senator EUGENE D. MILLIKIN; Wyoming: Senator JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, Senator LESTER C. HUNT; Montana: Senator ZALES N. ECTON.

Your message 22d concerning relief rates on feed in the distressed areas and livestock out of such areas. Blizzard conditions caused us very heavy expense and with our high operating costs and comparative low rate levels we cannot afford to make reduced rates under present conditions because of situations of this kind. However, as you know, railroad industry likewise facing critical situation because of failure of rates to meet mounting costs. We have already explained to Nevada Public Service Commission that we are not in position to grant requested reduction in rates on livestock or feed as existing rates are on extremely low basis.

Railroads are being constantly asked to reduce rates in similar situations, as, for example, in connection with severe drought which occurred in California last spring.

We will do everything necessary to provide service if an emergency develops, but are now operating at very heavy expense, due to extreme cold and snow, and will have little, if any, net income this month. Transportation at less than published rates cannot, in my opinion, be justified under these conditions.

DENVER, COLO., January 24, 1949.
GEORGE W. MALONE,
United States Senator from Nevada.

DEAR GEORGE: In reply to your telegram, January 22, your problem, as far as livestock is concerned, is not one of freight rates and I see no necessity of establishing emergency rates at this time. Your problem is to get feed to the sheep and cattle on the ranges.

As you well know, west of Ely and in this sheep country, sheep are located 100 to 150 miles from a railroad, and, as Senator WATKINS knows, this is equally true of southern and western Utah and the Utah sheep that range in Nevada.

The worst thing to try to do is to get them to a railroad. What is needed are bulldozers and equipment to clear the snow to get to the sheep and cattle so that hay and pellets can be brought in as quickly as possible and not too late. The worst thing that could happen would be to try to drive this stock to a railroad head unless, of course, tractors and snow plows are used to make a trail for them.

I know this picture because I was interested in a band of sheep which we wintered west of Ely and sheep, incidentally, are more seriously affected in this picture than cattle. Both, however, are in distress.

I agree with your first and second provisions.

Acknowledging your telegram January 22, which reached me here at Salt Lake City today. I presume that in your consideration of questions presented someone must have recognized the fact that the railroads are being put to enormous expense, not only for maintaining service at all but also utterly out of the question to expect all concerned to recover losses sustained under conditions like this through reductions in freight rates which are already so low that adequate maintenance for future service has to be curtailed. My answer, therefore, to applications for emergency freight rates for feed, livestock, or anything else must be in the negative.

Emergency snow conditions existing throughout Nevada with most critical areas in Elko, White Pine, Lincoln, Nye, Eureka, and Humboldt Counties. Authorization from Congress to Bureau of Land Management, Forest Service, Army, and Navy to take any steps necessary to relieve emergency arising from winter storms with assurance of deficiency appropriation to cover of utmost importance. Lack of heavy snow-fighting equipment to stricken areas. Necessary action for emergency railroad rates on feed and livestock to and from critical areas should follow. Losses in both cattle and sheep are increasing daily with many sections still isolated and no reports available. Immediate action for relief is vital.

JANUARY 25, 1949.

We have just been successful in getting $100,000 allocated from President's disaster fund to be used under supervision Public Works Department coordinating activities Government bureaus within area, $50,000 confined to Indian Bureau, $50,000 to Bureau of Land Management for movement of feed and livestock, clearing roads, trails, etc. Trying to get additional $150,000. Senate resolution introduced yesterday, committee hearings completed today, will be presented to Senate tomorrow for $750,000 limit reimburse Federal agencies for emergency expenditures. These agencies include Bureau of Public Roads, the armed services, Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Reclamation, Forest Service, Soil Conservation Service, and all others available within the area.

Committee of western Senators, of which I am chairman, have contacted all railroads serving the affected areas and have received replies, some not favorable but mostly willing negotiate assistance freight rates.

One result is general assurance from all roads that necessary equipment for movement of feed and livestock will be made available through priority. I have contacted C. V. Isbell, contractors, Reno, and they are mobilizing all available private contractors' equipment, including D eights, D sevens, motor patrol equipment, and other machinery suitable for road and trail clearance, all of which if necessary could be obtained under the emergency bill now before the Senate and the President's disaster fund allocation, and they say can be moved into the Ely or Elko areas within 24 hours. The committee is following through, keeping in close touch with all departments. Field of Public Works is leaving for the storm area immediately. Am urging railroads send in representatives assist shipping.

Travel time and difference between straight time and overtime rates of operators and cost of repairs to equipment other than that due to ordinary wear and tear. Due to subzero weather conditions it will be necessary to cut holes in track plates to avoid packing of snow and resulting track breakage. This involves replacement of tracks later. Rates for truck transportation to move equipment to job site $12.50 per hour. Approximate moving time Reno to Ely 20 hours; Reno to Elko 12 hours. However, due to highway conditions trucks could easily be delayed. Can have first equipment on job within 24 hours after notice to proceed.

JANUARY 27, 1949.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Senate today approved a joint resolution authorizing the appropriation of $3,000,000 for the purpose of breaking trails through the snow-bound areas for feed and livestock, and a resolution reimbursing $500,000 to the President's disaster fund created last year, it was announced today by Senator MALONE. To date $300,000 has been allocated from the President's disaster fund to the Western States, including fifty-thousand designated for the Indian Bureau and today a further request is being made for an additional $500,000 for the same purpose.

The cooperative response from the Government bureaus has been 100 percent and the railroads have placed a priority on equipment for the transportation of feed and livestock and are sending their representatives into the areas, the Senator advised.

Also the heavy equipment mobilized by the committee in the State of Nevada and other areas is now in use.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I inquire what is the parliamentary situation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary situation is that the joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. WATKINS. Is it open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a committee amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof, the following:

That (a) in order to transport sufficient feed and otherwise take care of livestock isolated by storms in the Western States, all agencies of the Government performing functions in the affected areas are authorized, upon request of the Governor of any such State and the approval of the coordinating agency, to break trails through snow-bound areas in such State and to take such other action as may be necessary temporarily to protect such livestock.

(b) Such agencies of the Government are also authorized to take action to provide emergency relief for Indians in areas isolated by such storms, if the coordinating agency certifies such action is necessary.

SEC. 2. The President shall designate an agency of the Government (herein called the "coordinating agency") to coordinate all activities of Government agencies performing functions under this joint resolution. Any Government agency performing such functions is authorized to cooperate with, or to use the personnel, supplies, facilities, and other resources of any other agency of the Federal Government and, with the consent of the head thereof, of any State, county, or local governmental agency.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $750,000, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. Any unexpended balance of funds appropriated for any purposes to any agency of the Government performing activities under this joint resolution are hereby made available to carry out such activities and deficiency appropriations as are hereby authorized, subject to the limitation specified in this section to reimburse in full the appropriation to such agency for any expenditures made hereunder. Sums appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained herein shall be available to reimburse in full the appropriation to any such agency for any expenditure made or obligation incurred, prior to the date of designation of the coordinating agency, if such expenditure or obligation is certified by the head of such agency to have been necessary in accomplishing the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC 4. Any agency performing activities under this joint resolution is authorized to employ additional personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and to incur obligations on behalf of the United States, by contract or otherwise, for the acquisition, rental, or hire of equipment, services, materials, and supplies, for shipping, drayage, travel, and communication, and for the supervision and administration of its activities under this joint resolution. Such obligations may be incurred in excess of any appropriations available to such agency, but the aggregate amount of such obligations and any other expenses incurred pursuant to this joint resolution shall not exceed the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 3. Neither section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C., sec. 5) nor section 3679 of the Revised Statutes (31 U. S. C., sec. 665) shall be applicable to any action taken pursuant to this joint resolution. The provisions of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, shall not be applicable to additional personnel employed hereunder.

SEC. 5. The authority conferred by this joint resolution shall not extend beyond April 15, 1949.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the committee amendment was agreed upon by the committee and the representative of the Bureau of the Budget.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] has been recognized.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 4, section 3, line 17, to strike out the figures "$750,000" and insert "$3,000,000." I wish to speak briefly on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 3, on page 4, line 17, in the committee amendment, after the words "not to exceed", it is proposed to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, the committee heard considerable evidence with respect to the amount of money which would be necessary to carry on the program already under way by the Federal agency. I now have figures before me for some of the States involved and some districts in the States, from a few of the services which have been active during this emergency. A note from one of the agencies gives me the information that in Utah, Colorado, and one grazing district in Nevada, the following governmental agencies—the Forest Service, the Soil Conservation Service, the Indian Service, and the Bureau of Land Management—have up to January 26 expended approximately $400,000 in storm relief. If the expenses continue as they have been running until February 5, the amount will be $570,000. This expenditure has amounted to approximately $170,000 a week. This note was just handed to me, having been received from the Bureau of Land Management, which has expended the larger portion of the sums named.

The storms began early in December in my State, and they have been continuous off and on ever since that time. We have had subzero temperatures much of the time, even when the storms were occurring. Sheep and cattle, and particularly sheep, are ranged on what is called winter range, on the western deserts of my State. The same condition exists also in Nevada and in other sections of the West where large flocks of sheep are ranged on summer range in the national forests, and are later taken to the western deserts, where they can get forage for the winter without being hand-fed.

The situation has developed to the point where, instead of having a normal supply of snow, which usually is barely enough to supply water for the sheep on the desert, it is now impossible for them to move more than a few yards from the camp where they usually come in for the night, and where they are bedded down. Because of this condition it will be necessary to feed for a long time.

Only about an hour and a half ago I received word that another snowstorm is raging in Utah and portions of Nevada, and other parts of the West. This means that the roads which have already been opened by the combined efforts of the counties, States, and Federal agencies involved will probably be filled with drifts in another 24 hours. It means that those agencies will have to use all their facilities day and night to keep the roads open, or these animals will perish. Even after the roads are opened and the storms cease for a time, there is so much snow on the ground that it will be impossible for the animals to forage for natural feed. The snow is entirely too deep, even for cattle to forage; and for sheep, of course, it is an utter impossibility. That means that they will have to be fed. It means that a constant patrol will be necessary to keep the roads open. As many of the sheep as can be moved to feed lots near the main highways will, of course, be moved; but there will be a continual expenditure.

One of the men from the Sheep Growers' Association in my State reported this morning that the probabilities are that relief will be needed for 60 days, in the normal course of a winter such as we usually have in the Mountain States. That does not mean that any abnormal condition will exist from now on, but even in the normal course of the weather, it will be necessary to have help for the next 60 days. The first 2 feet of snow which has fallen on the ground has become heavily saturated with water, and frozen, and it will be a long time before that snow melts. It may be even as late as the first of May before the sheep can get natural water and forage on the desert.

Mr. O'MAHONEY rose.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator from Wyoming wish me to yield to him?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to make a comment.

Mr. WATKINS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was about to say that the committee was desirous of holding the sum to be authorized down as close as possible to the need. I know that what the Senator from Utah has just said is true. I have also received official word today from the State of Wyoming that snow is again falling and the wind is blowing. The new snow and the old snow are drifting and closing the roads. So I have no way of estimating what the eventual cost of this operation will be. I do know that the State Legislature of Wyoming has already made an appropriation. So also has the Legislature of South Dakota. If I am correctly advised, the Legislature of the State of Nebraska has also acted.

In view of the fact that this bill will have to be considered in the House, I am wondering if the Senator would modify his amendment so as to make it $2,000,000 instead of $3,000,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I should like to point out to the Senator that yesterday the State of Utah appropriated $250,000 to aid in this relief work. I understand that the States which have not appropriated money are preparing to make appropriations.

I point out to the Senator that the Bureau of Land Management stated to me only today that unless a considerable sum is authorized it will be necessary for that agency to close down its work in probably less than a week. The funds they now have are not sufficient to carry on much longer. Having spent as much as they have spent in the districts and States to which I have referred, not to mention the other States which are involved, they will be out of money and will not be able to carry on. In my judgment, it would be much better to keep the amount high enough to take care of these emergencies as they are taking place, rather than to make the sum too small. My judgment is that even $3,000,000 will be inadequate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the bill must go to the House for consideration, I am not disposed to object to the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] to the committee amendment on page 4, line 17.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I have had some correspondence and telephone calls from the governor of my State, and I find that the State legislature has appropriated $100,000 for quick relief. It did so a few days ago. The information coming to me is that feed for this livestock is in the area. What is needed is funds to augment the efforts of the State highway department. I fear that the language is not quite broad enough. If the Senator from Wyoming will look at line 25 on page 3, he will notice that the language authorizes these agencies to break trails. After the word "trails" I should like to add the words "open highways and farm-to-market roads." I offer that amendment on page 3, line 25, in the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 25, in the committee amendment, after the word "trails", it is proposed to insert the words "open highways and farm-to-market roads."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I quite agree with the purpose of the amendment; and on behalf of the committee, I shall be very glad to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Are there further amendments to be offered to the committee amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to, as follows:

That (a) in order to transport sufficient feed and otherwise take care of livestock isolated by storms in the Western States, all agencies of the Government performing functions in the affected areas are authorized, upon request of the Governor of any such State and the approval of the coordinating agency, to break trails and open highways and farm-to-market roads through snowbound areas in such State and to take such other action as may be necessary temporarily to protect such livestock.

(b) Such agencies of the Government are also authorized to take action to provide emergency relief for Indians in areas isolated by such storms, if the coordinating agency certifies such action is necessary.

SEC. 2. The President shall designate an agency of the Government (herein called the "coordinating agency") to coordinate all activities of Government agencies performing functions under this joint resolution. Any Government agency performing such functions is authorized to cooperate with, or to use the personnel, supplies, facilities, and other resources of any other agency of the Federal Government and, with the consent of the head thereof, of any State, county, or local governmental agency.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $3,000,000, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. Any unexpended balance of funds appropriated for any purposes to any agency of the Government performing activities under this joint resolution are hereby made available to carry out such activities and deficiency appropriations are hereby authorized, subject to the limitation specified in this section, to reimburse in full the appropriation to such agency for any expenditures made hereunder. Sums appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained herein shall be available to reimburse in full the appropriation to any such agency for any expenditure made or obligation incurred, prior to the date of designation of the coordinating agency, if such expenditure or obligation is certified by the head of such agency to have been necessary in accomplishing the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 4. Any agency performing activities under this joint resolution is authorized to employ additional personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and to incur obligations on behalf of the United States, by contract or otherwise, for the acquisition, rental, or hire of equipment, services, materials and supplies, for shipping, drayage, travel, and communication, and for the supervision and administration of its activities under this joint resolution. Such obligations may be incurred in excess of any appropriations available to such agency, but the aggregate amount of such obligations and any other expenses incurred pursuant to this joint resolution shall not exceed the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 3. Neither section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C., sec. 5) nor section 3679 of the Revised Statutes (31 U. S. C., sec. 665) shall be applicable to any action taken pursuant to this joint resolution. The provisions of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, shall not be applicable to additional personnel employed hereunder.

SEC. 5. The authority conferred by this joint resolution shall not extend beyond April 15, 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority, I offer, and desire to have adopted, a preamble to the joint resolution.

The preamble was read and agreed to as follows:

Whereas the Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior and other agencies of the Government have made expenditures and incurred obligations in connection with the emergency resulting from the continuing unprecedented storms in the Western States; and

Whereas additional authority is necessary to reimburse the appropriations of such agencies for expenditures heretofore made and to provide for the continuation of relief in such areas until the emergency created by such storms has abated: Therefore be it

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to authorize the United States to break through snow-bound areas in western range States, to take other necessary action to move in supplemental feed and otherwise care for livestock isolated by storms in such States, and to provide emergency relief for Indians in areas isolated by such storms."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the report of the committee be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (S. J. Res. 38) to authorize the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Reclamation, and other agencies of the Government to break through snow-bound areas in the western range States, and to take other necessary action to move in supplemental feed and otherwise care for livestock isolated by storms which have created an emergency, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the following amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend that the resolution, as amended, do pass.

The text of the resolution, as amended, is as follows:

"That (a) in order to transport sufficient feed and otherwise take care of livestock isolated by storms in the Western States, all agencies of the Government performing functions in the affected areas are authorized, upon request of the Governor of any such State and the approval of the coordinating agency, to break trails through snow-bound areas in such State and to take such other action as may be necessary temporarily to protect such livestock.

"(b) Such agencies of the Government are also authorized to take action to provide emergency relief for Indians in areas isolated by such storms, if the coordinating agency certifies such action is necessary.

"SEC. 2. The President shall designate an agency of the Government (herein called the 'coordinating agency') to coordinate all activities of Government agencies performing functions under this joint resolution. Any Government agency performing such functions is authorized to cooperate with, or to use the personnel, supplies, facilities, and other resources of any other agency of the Federal Government and, with the consent of the head thereof, of any State, county, or local governmental agency.

"SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $750,000, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. Any unexpended balance of funds appropriated for any purposes to any agency of the Government performing activities under this joint resolution are hereby made available to carry out such activities and deficiency appropriations are hereby authorized, subject to the limitation specified in this section, to reimburse in full the appropriation to such agency for any expenditures made hereunder. Sums appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained herein shall be available to reimburse in full the appropriation to any such agency for any expenditure made or obligation incurred, prior to the date of designation of the coordinating agency, if such expenditure or obligation is certified by the head of such agency to have been necessary in accomplishing the purposes of this joint resolution.

"SEC. 4. Any agency performing activities under this joint resolution is authorized to employ additional personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and to incur obligations on behalf of the United States, by contract or otherwise, for the acquisition, rental, or hire of equipment, services, materials and supplies, for shipping, drayage, travel, and communication, and for the supervision and administration of its activities under this joint resolution. Such obligations may be incurred in excess of any appropriations available to such agency, but the aggregate amount of such obligations and any other expenses incurred pursuant to this joint resolution shall not exceed the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 3. Neither section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C., sec. 5) nor section 3679 of the Revised Statutes (31 U. S. C., sec. 665) shall be applicable to any action taken pursuant to this joint resolution. The provisions of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, shall not be applicable to additional personnel employed hereunder.

"SEC. 5. The authority conferred by this joint resolution shall not extend beyond April 15, 1949."

Hearings were held by the committee on this resolution at which representatives of the Interior and Agriculture Departments, armed services, Forest Service, Public Roads Administration, and the American Red Cross were heard.

It was pointed out that the snowstorms and extremely cold weather which have occurred in certain Western States are without question worse than western winter conditions in the memory of any living man. The admitted dire results are impossible to estimate. Senators and Congressmen from all the snow-bound States have been receiving frantic telephonic and telegraphic requests for Government action and assistance.

The resolution aims to provide immediate emergency relief in the areas affected by the continuing serious winter storms by cooperating with the governors of the States to the fullest extent possible with the money authorized to be appropriated herein. Such cooperation will take the form of furnishing, among other things, road-breaking equipment to open and keep open the roads in the devastated areas so that livestock now isolated by the storms may be fed. The resolution also legalizes expenditures of, and provides for reimbursement to, Federal agencies which have already engaged in relief measures. It makes clear that any sums heretofare spent by such agencies are not a violation of the antideficiency law. The aggregate amount of money that may be spent for the purposes specified in the resolution (whether made on or before the date of enactment of the resolution) is $750,000. It is also provided that such money may be used for emergency relief for Indians in areas isolated by such storms. A coordinating agency, to be designated by the President, will coordinate all activities of Government agencies performing functions under the resolution so that duplication and overlapping of effort will be avoided.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior William E. Warne advised the committee that certain bureaus of his Department have been on an emergency operating basis for the past 10 days. The conditions are extremely bad in western Utah, eastern Nevada, Wyoming, and Montana. The main roads were opened at one time during the week in Utah and eastern Nevada, but they have been closed again by subsequent storms.

Secretary Warne said there is great distress among the Indians, particularly in certain sections of the Great Plains. He stated that in order to get the roads opened all the equipment available to the Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and other agencies at the disposal of the regional disaster committee has been working vigorously, and that now the equipment available is breaking down as the result of continuous and trying operation.

Secretary Warne added that "we are now moving on a basis of dire emergency, and we will need—seriously need—the kind of authority that this resolution contains to back up the actions we have taken." He said the figure of $500,000 in the original resolution was much too low and asked that it be increased. While no accurate estimate can be given at this time, he believes, if the winter continues in only moderate severity, expenditures will be heavy, but, if it remains critical, they may greatly soar.

Representatives of the American Red Cross advised the committee that between thirty and thirty-five thousand dollars have already been spent by the organization for emergency type of assistance to meet human needs.

Their records show that 30 counties in North Dakota, South Dakota, and Nebraska alone are in disaster status.

Reports from Wyoming's statistician for the department of agriculture, in Cheyenne, show that 55,200 head of cattle and 100,000 head of sheep have already been lost. On Monday the temperature in Wyoming was as low as 40° below in one area, and we are advised that a consistent below-zero temperature, ranging from 12° to 80° below zero, persists in Montana.

A representative of the Federal Works Agency stated that, while the State highway departments and the county highway departments had had the resources to get the main roads cleared, these were fast becoming expended, and there seems to be a lack of authority and money to get from main roads into where the cattle are located.

The representative of the United States Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, stated that—

"In our judgment, we need to be financed to take care of about 15 complete outfits in the inner-mountain region at about $100 a day. That would be 15 to 20 outfits, with an additional number in the Rocky Mountain region, and then, if the situation develops in Arizona, as we, too, are getting rumors it might, we will need an additional amount down there. Altogether, for 30 days, it is our estimate that it would take us between $90,000 and $120,000 for equipment that we have available and wish to throw into this job."

The committee was also informed that in one particular area 75 bulldozers were available at a rental rate of $8 per hour with operators—at a cost for a 30-day period of $432,000.

In view of the action of the President in designating the Federal Works Agency (acting through the Bureau of Community Facilites) to enter into agreemnts with the governors of the respective States with regard to the funds he has made available, it was the opinion of the committee that this resolution should be accordingly amended.

It is also the view of the committee that the amount of $500,000 is inadequate for the existing emergency. The amount has been increased to $750,000.

The continued destruction of livestock is extremely serious and of great interest to the whole country. The estimate of loss at the present time is from 30 to 50 percent. It is of inestimable importance that the roads be opened at the earliest possible moment.

The Legislature of Wyoming has appropriated $200,000, the State of South Dakota $100,000, and the State of Nebraska is now considering an appropriation of $500,000 for assistance in those States.

DISASTER RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably House Joint Resolution 112, making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes. This is similar to the Senate joint resolution which has just been passed by the Senate. The Senate joint resolution provided for larger appropriations. However, it seems to be very necessary to start this work at once. The House has already adjourned, and the only opportunity to start it at once is to act upon the House joint resolution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Without objection, the report will be received, and the joint resolution will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 112) making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMBERSHIP IN PROPOSED NORTH ATLANTIC PACT AGAINST AGGRESSION

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, during the past week the representatives of the Scandinavian countries of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark have been meeting to discuss, among other things, whether they should or should not become members of the proposed North Atlantic pact against aggression.

Press reports both here and abroad indicate that Sweden wants to sit on the side lines, Norway wishes to ally herself with the Western World, and Denmark is trying to compose the different points of view.

At this point in my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article from the London Times of January 20, to be followed by an article from the New York Times of January 25.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the London Times of January 20, 1949]

SCANDINAVIA AND DEFENSE—AGREEMENT UNLIKELY

(From our diplomatic correspondent)

The Prime Ministers, Foreign Ministers, and military experts of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, accompanied probably by six members of Parliament from each country, are to meet in Copenhagen on Saturday for further discussion of the question of mutual defense and the attitude of Scandinavia to the Atlantic Pact. There will be a final meeting in Oslo on January 29, but the Norwegian Prime Minister has given the opinion that a decision may be reached at Saturday's meeting.

It is understood that the Danish and Norwegian Governments were asked by Washington toward the end of the year whether they wished to be invited to the conference that will draft the Atlantic pact of mutual assistance. Discussions with Sweden were initiated, and the issue, now crystallized, has caused some heartburning. Briefly, it is the issue whether, as Sweden insists, the traditional Swedish policy of armed neutrality should be extended through the medium of an exclusively Scandinavian defense pact to cover Norway and Denmark, or whether, as Norway proposes, the Scandinavian countries, while cooperating between themselves, should also seek the security of the Atlantic pact.

DENMARK AS MEDIATOR

Denmark's role has been that of a mediator intent on holding the three countries together. One of its suggestions met Sweden's idea of a Scandinavian pact, but would have left the signatories free to associate themselves, if they wished, also with the Atlantic pact. Its final suggestion, mentioned by our Stockholm correspondent yesterday, was that the Western Powers be asked whether military support would be available to a Scandinavian bloc owing no obligations either to west or east. That was scotched by a State Department announcement, since confirmed by the American Ambassadors in the three capitals, that no military supplies or raw materials would be available to countries (other than a few to which America has specific obligations) not associated with the United States in collective defense arrangements.

Sweden's objections to joining the Atlantic pact can be understood. She has by her neutrality policy succeeded in staying out of two world wars. She suspects that, as an ally of the Western Powers, she would be immediately in the front line in the event of a conflict with the Soviet Union. In the meantime her strategic position would have been impaired if Scandinavia's adherence to the Atlantic pact were made the pretext by the Soviet Union for a tough policy toward Finland. Norway, whose experience is rather different, puts little value on neutrality once aggression has been unleashed anywhere, and argues that it is confusion and disunity among all the countries of the west, rather than their solidarity for defense, that is more likely to tempt a would-be aggressor.

SWEDEN'S RESOURCES

A Scandinavian defense pact is an advance in Swedish thinking, but the Norwegians are strengthened in their position by knowledge that Sweden lacks the resources—particularly raw materials such as oil—to sustain an adequate military establishment for Sweden, to say nothing of equipping and protecting Norway and Sweden as well. So much has been publicly admitted by the Chief of Staff of the Swedish armed forces, General Jung. Of course, the signatories of the Atlantic pact might find that there is not as much in the way of military supplies to go round as they could wish. That is not to say, however, as some Swedes do, that France or Britain would prefer Scandinavia to remain outside the Atlantic pact until French and British needs in military equipment have been met. The advantage of having Scandinavia associated with the continuous planning of the defense of the western world is regarded as outweighing by far the disadvantage that Scandinavia's needs in military equipment will reduce the amount available to other signatories.

Latest statements by Scandinavian political leaders, and opinions in the press, indicate that no agreement between the Three Powers is to be expected. Sweden, for the time being at any rate, is likely to go its isolationist way, and Denmark is likely to follow Norway into the Atlantic pact.

ACCORD NO NEARER ON NORDIC DEFENSE—TALKS IN COPENHAGEN HALT, BUT WILL BE RESUMED ON SATURDAY IN OSLO

(By George Axelsson)

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, January 24.—The question of a Scandinavian mutual defense pact remained unsettled when the high-level talks between Norway, Sweden, and Denmark ended here tonight. The door has been left open for further talks in Oslo.

It proved impossible here to compose the differences between Sweden and Norway on an approach to the United States for arms for a Nordic defense union. The next try in Oslo this coming Saturday will not necessarily be the final one.

A well-nigh unbridgeable gap exists between Norway and Sweden. Norway seems determined to pledge membership in the Atlantic Union in return for arms from the United States while Sweden would make merely a noncommital request for such aid. If a formula can be found for a joint Scandinavian approach, the fate of the proposed Nordic defense union still will hinge on the answer by the United States.

Throughout the Copenhagen conference the Swedes have been playing for time, observers agree. Yesterday they moved to have the conference adjourned one week. The move is aimed at consulting parliamentary opinion at home more fully in view of the threatening break-down.

TO STUDY ATLANTIC PACT DRAFT

It was also reported that the Scandinavian ambassadors who were called home from Washington for consultation carried the draft of the proposed Atlantic pact, and the recess would afford a chance to study the document thoroughly. As it is, the Oslo conference scheduled for Friday was put off one day as a concession to Sweden.

The Scandinavian statesmen are consoling themselves over the lack of progress in Copenhagen by saying that at least all political parties in the respective countries are now fully informed on all the problems arising out of the proposed pact.

The Scandinavian premiers and foreign and defense ministers in a joint communiqué said that agreement had been reached on two points. These were:

First, to achieve under certain conditions a mutually binding but outwardly independent Scandinavian defense group within the framework of the United Nations Charter. This would mean coordination of staffs, military forces, war production, and standardization of equipment among the three countries.

Second, that it should be ascertained whether the countries participating in a Scandinavian alliance would be able to obtain the equipment needed for reconstruction of their defenses within a definite period and on certain well-defined economic terms.

PREMIERS MAKE COMMENTS

After the conference each of the three Scandinavian premiers issued statements on the situation to the correspondents of their countries. The gist of this comment was that the difficulties of reaching agreement proved greater than expected and that to cite the Swedish Premier, Tage Erlander, "In reality we have not achieved much more progress on Monday than we did Sunday."

Norwegian Premier Einar Gerhardsen, for the Norwegian delegation, expressed the opinion that there was little hope of agreement on a Nordic Alliance being reached at the coming week-end meeting in Oslo.

Norwegian delegates have hinted at the possibility of yet another conference, this time in Stockholm, shortly afterward, since none of the Scandinavian countries wishes to bear the responsibility before home opinion for breaking up the present negotiations.

The Danish representatives maintained throughout discussions that the United States ought to show more understanding for the difficulties of Scandinavia's geographical position vis-ā-vis the Soviet Union. They also quoted the Swedes as being skeptical of United States ability to help Scandinavia materially, alliance or no alliance, in view of its present and ever-growing commitments. This was echoed in the highest Danish policy circles, where one recurring question is, "What will be Scandinavia's priority number with and without alliance? If we must trail the United States, Britain, France, Holland, and Belgium, maybe we are better off fending for ourselves."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, we have arrived at the place in history when we must face the fact that peace is indivisible. Aggression or the threat of aggression anywhere in the world is of vital concern to the law-abiding nations everywhere in the world.

The Scandinavian nations, as well as the United States of America, are members of the United Nations. If this organization for collective security means anything, it surely means that its members will not sit idly by while an aggressor power overtly attacks its neighbors.

Within the framework of the United Nations Charter there is provision for regional security pacts. Our Nation has already become a signatory to one embracing the Western Hemisphere. Both historic background and geographic proximity make the prospective North Atlantic pact of equal importance to this Nation.

With the degree of collective security such a pact will furnish, it may be possible for the free nations of western Europe, with ECA funds from this country, to move on to the constructive settlement of their economic problems. We can hardly expect a long-term recovery when the fear of aggression hangs over the Continent.

When the North Atlantic pact comes before the American Congress the American people are going to be called upon to reverse their historic policy. They can hardly be expected to do so with enthusiasm, Mr. President, when nations with a closer proximity to the seat of potential aggression think they can remain neutral. Of course, they can do no such thing. If Soviet Russia moves to invade western Germany and western Europe, the other members of the United Nations must immediately act in their common defense or the whole collective security idea will perish then and there. If the United States and the Western World should be defeated by Soviet Russia, do the Scandinavian countries think they could remain as a free island in a world totalitarian sea?

In a real sense there can be no neutrals in the struggle to establish a free world of free men whose peace will be assured under a collective-security system based on international law and justice. No member of the world community can "sit this one out." It is a common responsibility, and no nation has the moral right to be a drone while its neighbors take all the risks.

The Netherlands, Denmark, and Norway, all of which were able to be neutrals in World War I, found that the choice was not theirs to make in World War II. Others should take judicial notice of this fact.

In this age of the airplane and the atom there will be no neutrals should there be a world war III. The only real hope any nation has to keep out of war is to prevent war from breaking out. This can best be accomplished by making the collective-security system so strong that no potential aggressor nation will dare take the calculated risk of making an overt attack upon a neighbor.

A heavy responsibility rests upon the Governments and people of the Scandinavian countries. If they refuse to join the North Atlantic pact against aggression, we may assume that they would likewise refuse to fulfill their obligations under the United Nations Charter. If this be so, though I sincerely hope it is not, then we must make our plans for economic and military aid accordingly.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I send to the desk sundry amendments to Senate bill 249, and ask that they be printed and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the four amendments I submit are to the bill presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the purpose of which is to restore the Wagner Act and to repeal for the most part sections of the Taft-Hartley law. The effect of the amendments is to restore to the Wagner Act some 16 or 17 different provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. I may say that the committee has acted with such haste that revisions of these amendments may be necessary. We have made certain changes from the Taft-Hartley law, and I have made certain changes in presenting them. They are presented so that they may be before the committee in the hearings which are to begin on Friday and which are to continue until February 10.

Mr. President, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare has adopted one of the most extraordinary procedures and one of the most extraordinary resolutions relating to procedure which I have seen in my experience in the Senate. I should like to read it to the Senate:

It is hereby resolved by this committee that the Taft-Hartley law be repealed and that the National Labor Relations Act, known as the Wagner Act, be restored as it existed at the time of the enactment of the Taft-Hartley bill with the single amendment as it stands in the Thomas bill (S. 249), which continues the National Labor Relations Board as a five-man body, as it now exists; that hearings begin forthwith on amendments to the Wagner Act consistent with the proposals made by the President; that said hearings be closed not later than February 10, 1949, and that the bill for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law be then reported to the Senate with such amendment or amendments to the Wagner Act as the committee may deem wise.

Apparently the drafter of the resolution seems to have thought that the committee could repeal the Taft-Hartley law, could restore the Wagner Act, and could then hold hearings on the Wagner Act; which, of course, is an utterly fantastic proposal. The purpose of the resolution could have been accomplished simply by saying, "We are going to hold hearings on the Thomas bill (S. 249)"; but in order to give the impression that in some way the Taft-Hartley law was being repealed first, in order to give the impression that this was a two-package approach instead of a one-package approach, this extraordinary language was adopted. The impression is given that the Taft-Hartley law, instead of being amended, is being repealed.

Of course, the effect of the whole resolution is that the committee contemplates an amendment of the Taft-Hartley law, a drastic amendment perhaps, but still an amendment. Of course, the President himself proposes the same course. He recognizes many of the good things of the Taft-Hartley law, and proceeds to say that they should be enacted. He says in his message to the Congress:

That act (the Taft-Hartley law) should be repealed.

The Wagner Act should be reenacted. However, certain improvements, which I recommended to the Congress 2 years ago, are needed. Jurisdictional strikes and unjustifiable secondary boycotts should be prohibited.

The Taft-Hartley law did prohibit both of those types of strike. There may be some question as to the definition of secondary boycotts, and it may be necessary to amend it in some regard, but the President has thereby endorsed that provision of the Taft-Hartley law.

The President then goes on to say:

The use of economic force to decide issues arising out of the interpretation of existing contracts should be prevented.

That is what the Taft-Hartley law does. The President is endorsing the retention of that feature of the law.

The President then says:

Without endangering our democratic freedoms—

In the way in which they were endangered by the bill which he proposed in the case of the railroad strike—

Means should be provided for settling or preventing strikes in vital industries which affect the public interest.

That is what the Taft-Hartley law did.

There were various amendments recommended by our committee last year, and various ways of improving the law, and the President is endorsing that provision of the law. Of course, the talk about repealing the Taft-Hartley law is for public consumption and for the benefit of the labor union leaders who are demanding its repeal, but the actual purpose is to amend the law.

The resolution, however, in other respects is unwise and harsh. The time allowed for hearings on a matter of this importance is wholly inadequate. The hearings are to begin on Friday and will run for a period of approximately 2 weeks, approximately 10 or 11 days of actual hearings.

Two years ago, when we considered labor legislation, we threw the hearings open to the entire country. We permitted everyone to come and testify. We gave them as much time as they desired. The hearings extended over a period of approximately 6 weeks. The single issue of what is the best method of preventing strikes against the national interest and strikes which affect the entire country is a serious and difficult problem. It alone requires the best possible advice we can obtain. We have had no testimony on how the law has operated within the last 2 years. We have had no testimony on the specific objections which have perhaps properly arisen to the operation of the law. As a matter of fact, I suspect that the reason the hearings are to be so short is in order that labor representatives may not be questioned in detail as to what is the matter with this provision, or what is the matter with that provision, and be forced to make specific criticisms instead of engaging in the general name calling and vociferous denunciation which has characterized their campaign up to this time. In effect, the shortness of the hearings chokes off the expression of public opinion on what is perhaps the most important question before the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the chairman of the committee has announced that he will present amendments such as the President has recommended. They are not yet prepared. We do not know what they are. The hearing will be begun, perhaps, without our knowing what the amendments are.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am a little surprised to hear the Senator from Ohio say that he does not have any general idea as to what the general scope of the President's proposals referred to in the resolution of Monday is. It was specifically stated in the resolution that the hearings would be upon amendments consistent with the President's proposals for the amendment of the Wagner Act. The President on more than one occasion has made specific recommendations to the Congress for amendment of the Wagner Act which are all a matter of record. So I am surprised that the Senator from Ohio, with his full knowledge of what goes on here, does not recall that the President set out the general subject of his proposals in his messages to the Congress, and that that is what the committee has reference to in its resolution of last Monday.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Florida was not present when I read the President's proposals, one of which was that "Means should be provided for settling or preventing strikes in vital industries which affect the public interest." I suppose there are a dozen different ways in which that might be done. We do not know what the President's proposal is in that regard, or whether it is any different from the language of the Taft-Hartley law. So hearings are now being set, to be terminated on February 10, without our even knowing on what subject the hearings will be held.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not care to yield at this point.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it has been proposed to begin hearings forthwith on the proposals offered by the President. Apparently the men who wrote the bill intended to shut off hearings on any other amendments not consistent with the recommendations made by the President. Evidently the intention was to prevent hearings on various questions relating to the Taft-Hartley law. Apparently the effort of the committee is to limit hearings to amendments submitted by the President.

Of course, I do not think that can legally or otherwise be done, so I do not take the resolution very seriously. But it shows the arbitrary character of the majority of the members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in attempting to exclude public consideration of amendments.

I do not see how the chairman of the committee can refuse to hold hearings on amendments which are offered by other members of the committee or offered by other Senators. The subject, of course, is so complicated and involved that it is difficult to see how a witness who wishes to testify on one feature of the law can be excluded from testifying on some other feature. But, according to the resolution, that appears to be the intention of the majority of the members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Therefore, Mr. President, I wish to put on record my protest against the arbitrary action of the committee. During the 2 years of the Eightieth Congress, I know of no instance in which we did not give full and reasonable hearings; I know of no instance in which hearings were not given commensurate with the importance of the subject involved.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator from Ohio overlooks the fact that there was an important public hearing on the Taft-Hartley bill in the United States of America on November 2. The Senator from Ohio would naturally like to discredit the hearing which was held on this subject on November 2. Naturally, if it were within the power of the Senator from Ohio, he would like to prevent the decision made on the Taft-Hartley law by the American people on November 2 from being implemented by this Congress. But I think, Mr. President, it is the disposition of the Democratic majority to keep the pledges of the Democratic platform and, of course, to keep the specific pledge made to the American people, namely, to secure the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. President, this is not a new subject to most of us; it is not a new subject to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. We have held extended, prolonged, and protracted hearings and discussions of the subject. I am informed that the record comprises more than 2,700 printed pages of testimony. So, Mr. President, the Democrats on the committee, after consultation and consideration of the subject, did not deem it necessary to go back and repeat all that voluminous testimony. We are not cutting off anyone. They have already been heard.

Several of us on the committee filed a minority report when the Taft-Hartley bill was before the committee in 1947. We knew then what the bill contained. We knew then we were opposed to it. The President was opposed to it. He votoed the bill, and the Democratic platform pledged to the American people the unqualified repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. We did not say in that platform, Mr. President, that we advocated amendment of the Taft-Hartley law, as was implied, if not expressed, in the Republican platform. The American people knew that there was a sharp difference of opinion between the two major parties over the Taft-Hartley legislation; that it was one of the principal issues in the campaign settled by the election of November 2. They knew that if the Republicans were returned to the control of the Congress, and if a Republican President were in the White House, the Taft-Hartley law, at best, would be amended only in minor and inconsequential and nonbasic particulars. But the Democratic platform, approaching the matter forthrightly and directly, as I believe that platform may be said to have done upon other important issues, pledged to the American people the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. President, what did that mean? It meant going back to the Wagner Act. It meant the reinstatement and the restoration of labor-management legislation as it existed when the iniquitous Taft-Hartley law was passed by the Congress, and made effective over the veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, let me read the resolution that was agreed to by eight, all the Democratic members, of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

It is hereby resolved by this committee that the Taft-Hartley law be repealed.

Is it not good ethics to keep one's pledged word to his constituency, the electorate of this country? That is what we are trying to do. We attempted it on Monday of this week.

And that the National Labor Relations Act, known as the Wagner Act, be restored as it existed at the time of the enactment of the Taft-Hartley bill with the single amendment as it stands in the Thomas bill (S. 249) which continues the National Labor Relations Board as a five-man body as it now exists.

I interpolate, it was a three-man board prior to the enactment of the Taft-Hartley law. We do make a single exception in repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. We recognize the amendment in S. 249 to continue the board as a five-man board instead of reducing it to a three-man board.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be more generous than the Senator from Ohio was. I shall yield for more than one question.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to my distinguished friend that I have listened to his remarks as attentively as I could, and he is usually very clear in what he has to say, but I do not understand from its language whether or not it was the purpose of the resolution adopted by the majority of the committee to report a bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act flatly, in those terms. Is that what the committee is purporting to do? Or what did it purport to do?

Mr. PEPPER. I think I can answer that by continuing to read the resolution to its conclusion. If the resolution does not speak for itself, I shall answer directly. I continue to read:

That hearings to begin forthwith—

Incidentally, they are to begin tomorrow, according to the notice of the chairman. This resolution was adopted Monday, to tomorrow is "forthwith" from Monday, I would take it—on amendments to the Wagner Act—

That is what we regard as what we are going to consider in the hearings.

on amendments to the Wagner Act consistent with the proposals made by the President.

Which are matters of record. The President has not spelled out the proposals in literal terms; he has not drawn amendments and sent them here, although I think that today the able chairman of the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], as he advised the committee he would at the earliest possible opportunity, after consultation with the Secretary of Labor, has offered the specific amendment which would carry out the substance of the President's proposals, and I hold a copy of the amendments in my hand. I believe it has been offered in the Senate today by the Senator from Utah, therefore it is within the scrutiny of every Member of this honorable body or it will be shortly.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will permit me to finish the reading:

consistent with the proposals made by the President; that said hearings be closed not later than February 10, 1949—

Mr. President, the committee adjudged that that would afford time enough for public hearings. The committee felt that in that length of time, if the witnesses were properly organized and presented, the committee could hear all it felt necessary to add to the 2,700 printed pages of hearings already had by the committee on this general subject—and that the bill for the repeal—

I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to this:

And that the bill for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law be then reported to the Senate—

That means upon the conclusion of the hearings on February 10 and after the committee in executive session has had an opportunity to consider whether any amendments would be added to the Wagner Act. I continue to quote:

With such amendment—

Of the bill for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, which we resolved upon in the committee Monday afternoon by an 8-to-5 majority, that the bill repealing the Taft-Hartley law be reported to the Senate after the hearings concluded on February 10 and after consideration of the subject by the committee—

With such amendment or amendments to the Wagner Act as the committee may deem wise.

Mr. President, by a vote of 8 to 5 we resolved to remove from the neck of labor the galling yoke of the Taft-Hartley law, to consider the general area of amendments where the President had made proposals, and later, when the chairman has offered the specific proposals suggested by the Secretary of Labor, to consider them, and to consider any other amendment offered in that general area; and when the hearings are concluded February 10 to consider the testimony offered and the amendments proposed, then for the committee to add on to the bill repealing the Taft-Hartley law and restoring the Wagner Act such amendment or amendments, in the language of the resolution, "as the committee may deem wise."

Mr. President, it seems to me that is very clear and very forthright and very explicit, the keeping of a pledge by the Democratic majority in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, am I right in the assumption that it was apparently the intention of a majority of the committee to hold no hearings whatsoever upon the question of whether or not the Taft-Hartley Act should be repealed?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is explicitly correct. We have already made up our minds to get rid of the Taft-Hartley law, and we do not need any additional testimony on that issue.

Mr. BALDWIN. What was intended was to deny to the American people any opportunity whatsoever to be heard with reference to the question of the repeal of this law?

Mr. PEPPER. The American people were heard from, from one end of this country to the other, on November 2, and we are attempting to implement the decision the American people made.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to remind my distinguished friend from Florida that in the East, which is a great industrial section, the candidate for President on the Republican ticket carried State after State. Did the Senator's party get a mandate from them?

Mr. PEPPER——

Mr. LUCAS. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is overlooking the fact that this is the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is making a point of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I make the point of order against the kind of debate now going on. If we are to have orderly debate, the Senator from Connecticut has no right to interrupt the Senator from Florida without getting permission to do so. I intend to try to insist, as majority leader, that that rule of the Senate be carried out, so far as it possibly can be, because without enforcement of that rule there will be no order in the Senate, so far as proper debate is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am sure it is not necessary for me to suggest to the able Senator from Connecticut that the electoral process in this country contemplates the election of a President by a majority in the electoral college, and that the election of Members of Congress is in the respective States and districts of America. I do not need to give to the able Senator from Connecticut any lecture on political science as it pertains to the United States of America. All I wish to say is that this was an issue in the campaign; that our Democratic platform was unequivocal on that issue; that our President met it forthrightly; that our candidates for Congress, Senate and House, campaigned upon that platform, and met that issue squarely to the American people. We did not promise them an amendment to the Taft-Hartley law.

We did not promise them protracted reconsideration of the Taft-Hartley law. We said, "Give us the congressional power and we will repeal the Taft-Hartley law," which meant, of course, the restoration of the Wagner Act as it existed at the time the Taft-Hartley law was superimposed upon it over the veto of the President of the United States. And, Mr. President, it is a good example to the nations and peoples of the earth groping for democracy, to see the good democratic practice of the Democratic Party keeping its pledged word to the people of the United States.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. May I come back to my original question? Do I understand the purpose of the resolution to be that the people of the United States, who might be interested in the question of the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, are going to be denied any opportunity whatsoever to be heard in the hearings before the congressional committee with reference to that matter?

Mr. PEPPER. If it means that they seek to continue——

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, may I have a categorical answer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is within the jurisdiction of the Senator from Florida. It is not a matter for the Chair to determine.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure the able Senator would not do me the injustice of supposing that I shall not presume to answer the question according to my own good judgment and in my own manner. If he would like me to answer the question in that way I should be very glad to do so. But I am not his witness on the stand, unfortunately, no doubt, for the Senator, because I am sure he would conduct a very grueling, no doubt a very effective cross examination, and no doubt bring great delight to his clients in such a case. But if the Senator wants a real answer to his question I will say that if the matter involved is the question of the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, in the opinion of the Democratic majority of the committee that is a closed question, and if anybody wishes to come before the committee and appear as a witness and argue that the Taft-Hartley law should be continued the committee, in its wisdom, and out of its experience and knowledge with the subject, has adjudicated that it is not necessary to hear further testimony on that subject, just as a judge often says to counsel, "I thank counsel very much, but the court does not desire to hear further argument upon that phase of the case."

Now the committee did adjudge that the President's proposals occupied a field which was new, and where advocates and opponents and modifiers should have a right to be heard fully. The committee proposes to give that right, and if anyone has any amendment in the general area of the President's recommendations which he desires to propose, he can certainly depend upon a fair and a full and a courteous hearing before the committee. But the resolution has limited the scope of the hearing.

Mr. President, we all know that hearings have to come to an end sometime, although there are those in this body, perhaps, who would not like these hearings to come to an end, because the longer the hearings are protracted the longer will be the continuity of the Taft-Hartley law; the longer it will gall the neck of labor and discriminate against the working people of America. Having considered the matter, we do not propose to allow this thing to be dragged out and drawn out and protracted and delayed, to serve the purposes of those who want only to keep the Taft-Hartley law either in toto or almost as it is.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Does not the Senator think it is only fair and just when a law was passed in the last Congress by such a substantial majority, and when such a substantial majority was present as to overrule the President's veto here in this very body, that as a matter of justice the people of this country and the Members of the Senate who desire to be heard with reference to the Taft-Hartley law should have an opportunity to be heard on the subject?

Mr. PEPPER. I can only say again, Mr. President, that there have been 2,700 printed pages of testimony already taken. There has been protracted debate in both Houses of Congress. It has been the subject of Presidential veto messages. It has been the subject of consideration by the two conventions of the two major political parties, and was especially provided for in the platforms of the two parties, and in the attitude of the respective parties. It was an issue bitterly contested in the campaign. Now, after all that, Mr. President, it does not seem at all unreasonable to the Democratic members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare—although I must say that all the Republican members seem to feel the other way about it—it does not seem at all unusual to the Democratic majority of that committee that we should fix February 10 as the time for the closing of these hearings, and that, as courts often do, we should narrow the scope of the hearings to the field and the area which is within the scope of the Presidential proposals on the subject.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question as a matter of information?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the able Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I want to ask the Senator merely one question. There is a provision of the Taft-Hartley law which requires union officers to make financial reports to members. That is not included in the President's proposal. So far as I know, there has been no objection to it. Do I understand that the Senator proposes to refuse to let anyone testify as to the merit of that provision of the Taft-Hartley law which the Senator is proposing to repeal?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, what may be the subject of the public hearings—that is, what subjects witnesses may be permitted to discuss—has generally been limited by the resolution adopted by a majority of the committee. But the Senator from Ohio well knows that there has been no limitation upon what committee members, or what any Senator might offer to the committee itself. Of course, the committee is going to consider any amendments that any Senator who is a member of the committee, or any other Senator, offers to the committee. No Senator is being shut off. But we are saying that when we come to the matter of public hearings we think the 2700 pages of testimony already taken, together with the additional testimony we will take beginning tomorrow and ending on February the 10th, will sufficiently advise the committee to permit it to act in executive session. So if the Senator from Ohio has any amendments he wishes to offer, that he wishes to submit to his colleagues on the committee, of course they will be respectfully heard and carefully considered. But we are limiting the time and the scope of the committee hearings in the interest of expediting this legislation, and because we think we have heard enough on the general field embodied in the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. TAFT. But does the Senator think that the committee is prejudging when it says "that the bill for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law be then reported to the Senate with such amendment or amendments to the Wagner Act as the committee may deem wise"; and if any Senator should offer the Taft-Hartley law in whole or in part as an amendment or amendments to the Wagner Act, the committee then has not foreclosed the consideration of the Taft-Hartley law in that way? Is that the statement of the Senator?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Ohio knows that his colleagues on the committee shall be considerate and courteous and attentive to any suggestions that he may make, and the committee will try to look him right in the eye and listen with a straight face just like a judge listens to a lawyer with whose arguments he does not agree. I would not want the Senator from Ohio to be sanguine in his confidence that he can expect any change of mind by the majority of the committee respecting the Taft-Hartley law, because he would not be likely to persuade the eight Democratic members of the committee to restore in whole or in part the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law as amendments to the Wagner Act.

Mr. TAFT. Even though there are things like the making of financial reports, to which there has been no objection so far as I know, from either labor or management.

Mr. PEPPER. What I have said is true in principle; and if there is an exception in detail, no doubt the exception proves the rule.

Mr. President, the committee wishes to be fair to itself, and, of course, to the Congress and the country. The committee felt that it should fix some time limit. If we do not fix some time limit to the hearings, they will run all through this session of Congress. I am afraid that there are some who would like to see them run all through this session of Congress, so that the Taft-Hartley law would not be impaired in this session of Congress.

The majority feels that this subject should be considered with expedition. However, it is to be considered with care, and we are going to be just as considerate of any Senator's proposals or suggestions as we possibly can be.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to make a few comments on the very able political speech which the Senator from Florida has delivered. It is a speech which certainly would win loud applause in any labor temple of America. Certainly labor would be enthusiastic, so far as its first response is concerned, upon hearing the Senator from Florida say that steps have been taken to repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

But in fairness, the Senator's speech in any meeting of American labor ought to be supplemented by an explanation as to why the resolution which the Senator from Florida offered and sponsored before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is a clear disservice to American labor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In my colloquy a moment ago with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] I believe I stated that 2,700 printed pages of testimony had been taken on this subject. I now have the reports before me. I was in error. There have been only 2,424 pages, and not 2,700. However, I believe that an inspection of the volume of the testimony will indicate that the subject has already been adequately covered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. MORSE. I yield if I do not lose my rights.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to ask my distinguished friend from Florida, if he is going to foreclose any opportunity for hearings or testimony on the Taft-Hartley law, how he is going to rely upon the testimony to which he has referred for a repeal of the law, when that testimony resulted in the overwhelming passage of the law.

Mr. PEPPER. Perhaps it was a reading of the evidence wrongly, or seeing darkly through Republican eyes, which led to that unhappy result.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I had just made the statement, before the interruption, that in my opinion the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida and adopted by the Democrats on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare the other day constitutes a great disservice to American labor. I wish to express my reasons for holding that belief.

It is very interesting to hear the Senator from Florida say that the majority of the American people decided on November 2 that the Taft-Hartley law should be repealed. I say in all kindness to the Senator from Florida that any such deduction as that is one of the most glaring examples of a non sequitur that I have ever heard on the floor of the Senate. His claim about a mandate to repeal the Taft-Hartley law constitutes plain argumentative nonsense.

Mr. President, in my judgment, for the Senator from Florida to read into the Democratic victory on November 2 a mandate of the American people to repeal the Taft-Hartley law, along the lines of his resolution, is certainly beyond any possibility of establishment by proof. When we take into account the many issues involved in that campaign, and when we take into account the fact that one bloc of voters was interested in one issue, another bloc of voters in another issue, and other blocs of voters in other issues, the totality of which added up to a Democratic victory, it seems to me that for any Senator to stand on the floor of the Senate and say that the total vote constituted a mandate for a specific action on a specific subject is fallacious reasoning. It goes beyond my powers of credulity.

Let me say to the Senator from Florida, as I have said to labor audiences across the country, that today, if we were to put the Taft-Hartley law to a plebiscite of the American people, because of their lack of understanding of the facts about the weaknesses in the law, I am willing to venture the guess that a majority of the American people would vote to retain the law. I say that as one who is opposed to the law. I say that as one who voted against the bill, which the majority leader [Mr. LUCAS] did not do, although in recent days he has been very anxious to speed up hearings on the law, apparently so that the law can be repealed according to the Democratic schedule. But what was the position of the Senator from Illinois when the bill was on the floor of the Senate to be voted upon? He voted for it. He is now the Democratic majority leader. Oh yes; he voted to sustain the veto; but I think it will have to be admitted that I took the leading part in the veto fight to postpone the debate long enough so that we could get a calm consideration of the veto message. I did not receive any help from the Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, other than his final vote to sustain my position.

Of course, this subject is charged with partisan politics. We ought to lift it above the level of partisan politics. Labor has a tremendous job to do in regard to the Taft-Hartley law. Let me tell labor what that job is. It is to stop calling the law names, and tell the American people, on the basis of the evidence that labor can advance—because the evidence is there—why the Taft-Hartley law should be so drastically changed that in effect it would constitute a repeal of it. But why get into an argument as to whether we are repealing or revising it?

Our job, on the basis of our experience under the Taft-Hartley law, is to get out of the law those things that are unfair to labor and industry, by reasonable amendments and revisions, based upon what? Based upon evidence. How are we going to get that evidence, under our democratic legislative processes, without full, fair, open public hearings?

In reply to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Florida gives assurance that if the Senator from Ohio wishes to offer any amendments, they will be considered. But he forewarns the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Ohio will stand in the position of a man before the bar pleading a case before a judge who has already in his own mind rendered his decision if he attempts to offer amendments in committee.

The discussion of the Senator from Florida on this floor today in regard to the attitude which the Democratic members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare are going to take in considering labor legislation is not consonant with the record of the Senator from Florida for fairness and open-mindedness. In effect, he stated on this floor today that the Democrats on the committee have prejudged the question of what amendments should be adopted. Mr. President, if one had sat in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare the other day and listened to the Democratic members when we tried to obtain consideration of my motion for a timetable which would assure fair hearings, he would have seen that the question had been prejudged by the Democrats on the committee. It was a matter of political strategy with them.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, of course, the Senator from Oregon is not failing to recall that the Senator from Florida, both in the committee and on the floor of the Senate, to the very limit of his ability fought against the enactment of the Taft-Hartley law, and branded it as legislation very inimical to the public interest.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that in my judgment the arguments he made against the Taft-Hartley law at the time when the fight against the bill was occurring on the floor of the Senate, were sound. I joined with him then in those arguments. I join with him now in those arguments. But I say to the Senator from Florida that the way to get good legislation is not to follow the procedural course which the Senator from Florida is primarily responsible for in this matter. I say that because the Senator's procedure is going to result in a fight here on the floor of the Senate, resulting in an attempt to write a piece of labor legislation on the floor of the Senate. We cannot write good labor legislation here on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President. So I do not propose to let the Senator from Florida "get by," so far as American labor is concerned, with any representation that the committee procedure for which he up to this hour is chiefly responsible insofar as the handling of labor legislation in the Eighty-first Congress is concerned, meets the best interest of American labor. I say to American labor here and now that the weeks immediately ahead will demonstrate that the course of action for which the Senator from Florida is responsible constitutes a great disservice to American labor. I hope we can persuade the Democrats in committee meetings to change the timetable they have adopted so that we can have fair hearings on this issue of labor legislation. Whether I am right or wrong depends on whether or not we are going to consider the problems, issue by issue, which must be taken up in order to have a fair piece of labor legislation passed by this Congress. Mr. President, we cannot possibly have fair consideration of the issues I wish to raise here this afternoon by any such timetable as that which the Senator from Florida has been able to get the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to adopt.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Oregon has for a long time had intimate and friendly relationships with organized labor in this country, and he is an unusually well-informed Senator and citizen. Will the Senator from Oregon question the fact that practically every labor organization in this country has come out by overwhelming resolution at every convention for the unqualified and simple repeal of the Taft-Hartley law?

Mr. MORSE. Of course the Senator from Florida is correct; but what am I supposed to do about that? Am I supposed to jump through a labor hoop? My job here on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President, is to take labor's demands and weigh them carefully on the evidence, and vote with them when the evidence supports them, and vote against them when they are wrong. On some proposals, labor happens to be wrong. I think we ought to hear labor's arguments on various amendments to the Taft-Hartley law; and when the evidence supports their position, I think we should vote with them; and when the evidence does not support their position, I think we should vote against them. That is all I am pleading for.

Let me say to the Senator from Florida that I am perfectly willing to be judged, when I stand for reelection in 1950, by my record in the field of labor relations. If the support of labor in my State depends upon my supporting the resolution of the Senator from Florida, then I do not want its support, because I am never going to stand for what I consider to be unfair procedure, for unfair procedure never serves the best interests of labor or any other group in this country.

Now, Mr. President, let us take an issue and apply the procedure of the Pepper resolution to it. Let us take the issue of emergency disputes, the so-called national paralysis cases. What are we going to do about them? What are we going to do about them under the so-called resolution of the Senator from Florida? I wish to tell you, Mr. President, that in my judgment if we are going to appraise properly the results in the field of emergency disputes, as the record will show them to be since the Taft-Hartley law was passed, if we are going to give careful, statesmanlike consideration to reforms in the law which ought to be passed if we are to have emergency disputes legislation which will meet the public interest, we cannot handle that one issue alone in less time than the total time provided for by the Senator from Florida in his resolution for the full consideration of all of the democratic proposals on labor legislation.

The first thing we ought to find out, Mr. President, is what have been the results of the emergency disputes sections of the Taft-Hartley law? I think by and large the record would show that the results have not been good ones, and that the emergency disputes sections of the Taft-Hartley law ought to be drastically rewritten. But the American people are entitled to know those facts. Labor should have been giving the American people, through a sound public-relations labor-education program, the evidence and the facts in regard to the operation of the Taft-Hartley law. Unfortunately labor has failed to inform the public as to the facts about the dangers inherent in the Taft-Hartley law but rather has followed the strategy for the most part of calling the bill names and crying "Repeal. Repeal." That is a political pressure approach, Mr. President; but we are never going to write sound legislation in any field if the legislation is going to be just the result of political pressure. It is not our job to write pressure-dictated legislation. Our job, Mr. President, as I see it, as Members of this body, is to make a studentlike approach to the evidence, pro and con, in respect to all the results which have already flowed from the passage of the Taft-Hartley law. The American people are entitled to know what the results have been and what the dangers in the law really are. I am so convinced that such public hearings as I have urged would leave no question as to the unsoundness of certain provisions of the Taft-Hartley law that I am sure the American people would back us up in the drastic revisions which I think that law needs. However, I am not going before the American people, Mr. President, as apparently the Senator from Florida and his Democratic colleagues are, and say, "I have reached the conclusion that the law should be repealed. My mind is made up. I will not listen to evidence to the contrary; or, if I do, I will listen to it with two tongues in one cheek." I think that is a just and fair description of the attitude of the Democrats on this matter. What they are saying in effect is, "If you want to bring in amendments, come on and bring them in. We shall listen to them; but we forewarn you that we know right now how we are going to vote on them."

Mr. President, that is not my conception of the way a Senate committee hearing should be conducted. That is not my idea of the purposes of hearings held by Senate committees. I thought that the purpose of Senate committee hearings was to find the facts. It takes time to find the facts. I do not want to spend a single hour longer than is necessary in conducting labor hearings at this session of Congress in order to get the facts. I think my Democratic friends know me well enough to know that if at any hearings conducted by the Labor Committee of the United States Senate we ever reach the point where there is any clear evidence that a member of the committee is seeking to stall those hearings for the purpose of preventing the committee from making a report in reasonable time for action in this session of Congress, the junior Senator from Oregon will oppose such stalling tactics.

But, I say to my Democratic friends, the unfairness in the procedure which they have adopted is that they do not give adequate time for a full, fair hearing on the facts. I was not married to my resolution, Mr. President, which sought to conduct hearings through the month of February, until on or about March 1. If we needed that amount of time I felt we ought to take it; if we need a few days more, I felt we ought to take it. I refused to commit myself to any specific date, but I said our goal and our objective ought to be to try to do this job by about March 1. Then, knowing from past experience the differences of opinion existing within the committee, I know that the chances would not be very good, if we did a thorough job of exchanging points of view among ourselves in the committee, of getting a bill out of committee much before about April 1.

What are we going to do now as a result of the Pepper resolution? I say as a gesture to labor, we are going to hold some hearings, up until February 10. We are going to restrict those hearings to certain very specific issues, and we, or at least the majority of the committee, are going to say, "Now, if you want to bring in any other issues, as a Senator, we will hear you"—apparently as a matter of senatorial courtesy, Mr. President—"but we want to forewarn you, our minds are pretty well made up." What kind of labor legislation is that procedure going to produce? Well, Mr. President, I will tell you. When the committee bill reaches the floor of the Senate a fight against it will start, because the committee will not be in any position to give assurance to both sides of the aisle that fair, full hearings have been given to the merits of all the issues involved in the type of labor legislation which ought to be passed by the Eighty-first Congress. That is where the disservice to American labor inherent in the Pepper resolution is clearly evident. The real helpful service to American labor would be for the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to conduct hearings so fair that the evidence presented in them would leave no room for doubt on the part of the American voters as to the desirability of drastic changes in the Taft-Hartley law. With that record behind us, men could not stand up on the floor of the United States Senate and say they have no confidence in the report of the committee, as I predict they will say in criticism of any report which is the product of the procedure adopted by the Democrats in the Pepper resolution. They would not be able, under my proposal, to say it, or at least carry any weight or influence with the argument, because the record would show, if the procedure I recommended had been followed, that we gave to every person entitled to it his day in court, on the basis of the evidence that he could present.

So I say to American labor again—and do not forget, Mr. President, I am under tremendous criticism today from American labor—the Pepper resolution is a serious mistake. I understand there are people in the Democratic Party who are gleeful because I voted against the Pepper resolution, but I know not a one of them who can present to American labor a sounder position or record on labor policies than the junior Senator from Oregon. It is no new experience for me, Mr. President, to hear labor criticize me. I have had that experience before, when I rendered decisions which labor did not like, because in a given case in arbitration or before the War Labor Board labor failed to prove its case. I have had labor criticism in Oregon, Mr. President, when I refused on occasion to say that the Wagner Act was a magna carta for labor. It never was, because it never was a well-balanced act. It was an act that gave to labor some long overdue rights; and I support the rights which the act gave to labor, but it did not give to employers corresponding procedural rights and protection against the unfairness of labor. I want to say to those Democratic forces, who I understand think that the position I am taking on labor legislation in the Eighty-first Congress may help rejuvenate Democratic opposition to me in the State of Oregon, I will take my chances in 1950, even with the Democratic voters in the State of Oregon, so far as my record of impartiality and fairness on the evidence is concerned.

What position am I in as a member of the Labor Committee, in view of the speech made by the Senator from Florida this afternoon showing clearly the attitude the Democrats on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare are going to take? I understand, from the Senator from Florida, that as a Senator I shall have the right to offer some amendments, whether those amendments deal with the limited issues which the Senator from Florida refers to in his resolution or not. Why should I bother to offer any amendments? Why should I offer amendments before a committee whose spokesman, as far as the Democratic side is concerned, on the floor of the Senate, this afternoon, has in all honesty and frankness—and I respect him for his forthrightness—confessed that the issues as to what is to be in the new labor bill to be proposed by the committee are pretty well prejudged anyway?

I may change my mind, depending upon what transpires in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, in meetings starting tomorrow, but I want to say here and now, if the attitude of the Democrats on that committee is going to continue to be the attitude expressed by the Senator from Florida this afternoon, I shall offer no amendments in the committee, because I do not intend to be a party to any such farce as the Senator from Florida has outlined. I shall offer my amendments on the floor of the Senate in due course. And let me tell you, Mr. President, in my judgment, when I offer them, I shall back them up with argument and evidence which will make it rather difficult, in most instances, even for the Senator from Florida to vote against them. But that is not the way we ought to do it. That is not the way to write legislation on this important subject.

Mr. President, when you think of all the problems that face America, and when you think of the great resentment that exists today in the industrial life of America, I say it is a sad thing that at the very beginning of the Eighty-first Congress we have apparently gotten ourselves into a position where we are going to have to write labor legislation on the floor of the United States Senate. One of the things which America sorely needs is industrial harmony, and better understanding between employers and workers. I happen to believe that there are increasing numbers of employers all over America who have come to recognize that many of the amendments for which I fought on this floor during the historic debate of 1947 were much more in the best interests of American industry and labor and the public than provisions on the same subject which were incorporated in the Taft-Hartley law. We have a great opportunity in the Eighty-first Congress, Mr. President, to bring labor and management together before us in the Labor Committee, to let them present their points of view on the Taft-Hartley law; to strike those many provisions in the law which I think need to be struck out, revise some others, and to bring in a fair and workable bill I care not under what name. If the Democrats want a Democratic label on it, I shall be glad to vote to give them a Democratic label. I am interested only in the final result of the legislation. Mr. President, you are not going to get good legislation through the procedure advocated by the Senator from Florida.

I close, Mr. President, by saying to American labor leaders, "It is not too late for you gentlemen to reconsider the procedure which has been adopted, I think under your sponsorship, through the spokesmanship of the Senator from Florida. In the interests of the men and women who wear the working clothes in America the matter should be reconsidered. The steamroller tactics which are being used on the Eighty-first Congress in this instance will serve only to crush labor." It is not too late for a change in this labor strategy. So far as the junior Senator from Oregon is concerned, before this debate is concluded I shall give labor leaders an opportunity to tell the country what is wrong with the amendments which I propose to offer on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, when I was making my remarks this afternoon on labor problems, I intended to ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the body of the RECORD, at the end of my remarks, as a part of them, a very able speech by Prof. Edwin E. Witte, chairman of the Department of Economics, University of Wisconsin, on Recent Labor Legislation of Interest to Labor. I make that request now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Without objection, the speech will be printed as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RECENT LABOR LEGISLATION OF INTEREST TO LABOR

The Taft-Hartley Act

The recent legislation in which labor is most interested is, undoubtedly, the Taft-Hartley Act. As Aaron has given you an excellent detailed analysis of that act—much better than I could do. To discuss the recent labor legislation of interest to labor without dealing with the Taft-Hartley Act, however, is like presenting Hamlet with the role of Hamlet omitted. So I shall deal with the Taft-Hartley Act in its broader aspects, skipping details as much as possible.

Giving you only general observations and making these in a summary manner, I have this to say about the Taft-Hartley Act:

1. The enforcement of the Taft-Hartley Act is still in an early stage:

(a) Important parts of the law are not as yet fully effective. The most important of these are the closed shop provisions. Closed shop contracts concluded before August 22, 1947, remain in full force and effect until their expiration date or until August 22, 1948, whichever is the earlier. A great many closed shop contracts were extended for 1 year immediately before August 22, 1947, and these contracts still have some weeks to run; others concluded before June 23, 1947, run until their expiration dates, which, in some cases, are several years from now.

(b) To date, the National Labor Relations Board has not decided even one unfair labor practices case which is premised upon the Taft-Hartley Act. The board has devoted its efforts mainly to disposing of cases which arose under the Wagner Act and were undecided when the new law took effect. It has adopted rules and procedures under the new law, which have been discussed by Mr. Aaron. It has decided important issues arising under the part of the law dealing with representation and election cases. But it still has to decide its first unfair labor practices case under the new law. In a speech delivered on June 11, Chairman Herzog said that 12 cases involving unfair labor practices charges against unions had reached the board, after examiner's hearings and reports, and that it would give these cases precedence. So we may expect board decisions ere long on some of the major issues raised by the new law, but these will be then, probably, appealed to the courts.

(c) District courts have passed upon some questions arising under the part of the act relating to unfair labor practices of unions, in injunction cases brought by the general counsel of the board, Mr. Denham. No decisions have come down from circuit courts of appeals and in the only two cases arising under the Taft-Tartley Act which have been decided by the Supreme Court—the National Maritime Union case, involving the Communist affidavits, and the Murray case, involving political expenditures by unions—the court did not decide the issues the unions presented.

In most respects, what the restrictions imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act upon unions means still has to be decided by the Board and the courts and will not be certainly known until the issues have been decided by the Supreme Court.

2. Thus far, the Taft-Hartley Act has proven more of an insult than an injury to the labor unions.

(a) It is clear that the law severely handicaps unions which fail to file the non-Communist affidavits and the financial reports which are prescribed as prerequisites the unions must satisfy to have any standing under the law. Three major companies—Remington-Rand, Caterpillar Tractor, Colt

Arms—which had contracts with left-wing unions have refused to have any further dealings with these unions and have gotten away with it. Noncomplying unions have lost two important strikes, the American Communications Association strike against the New York cable companies and the recent strike of the United Packing House Workers, CIO, against the major meat packers. No complying unions have sustained such reverses.

(b) Total union membership seems to have increased since passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. These gains have resulted principally from increased employment in plants which already were under union contracts. Unions have won a majority of the representation elections but a smaller percentage than prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. The southern organizing drive seems to have been slowed up to inching gains. The principal damage done to labor by the Taft-Hartley Act has resulted from a vague fear which it has produced among unorganized or, but recently, organized workers that there is something unlawful about what the unions are doing and that workers are liable to get into jail or be fined if they go along with the unions. To some extent, also, the interests of quite a few union leaders have been diverted from organizational efforts to the legal battles in the courts. But, thanks to nearly full employment, the injury to the unions from the Taft-Hartley Act to date has been a minimum.

3. While the Taft-Hartley Act has not damaged labor very greatly to date there are reasons to believe that it will prove more restrictive and injurious in the not very distant future. These reasons include:

(a) The restrictions upon union security will become fully effective in the near future. The National Labor Relations Board and the courts will before long decide many of the major questions raised by the act. That labor will win all of these cases is not in the cards.

(b) The interpretations of the Taft-Hartley Act given thus far by the National Labor Relations Board are far less restrictive than are the interpretations of Mr. Denham, the general counsel. The National Labor Relations Board has a 3 to 2 prolabor majority. The term of a member favorable to labor will be out and a new appointment will be made after the election. If the new appointee holds different views than does the present member, the law will be applied much more harshly than it has been to date. It should be noted also that Mr. Denham has fared much better in his extreme interpretations with the courts than with the trial examiners of the Board. Even if the Board renders decisions favorable to labor, there is a good chance of their being upset on appeal to the courts.

(c) The law has thus far functioned in a time of near full employment. Employers generally and particularly the large employers have thus far heeded, pretty well, the advice given them when the Taft-Hartley Act was passed, by Mr. Bunting, the then president of the American Manufacturers' Association to go slow in their use of the new law. Whether they will adopt the same attitude when mass unemployment will give employers the upper hand in strikes remains to be seen, when the business cycle turns decidedly downward.

(d) This is an election year, in which many of those who were responsible for the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act have been anxious to avoid further offense to labor. With an election coming up, the many proposals before Congress to place further restrictions upon labor were all allowed to die without being voted on.

(e) That the next Congress will enact new labor relations legislation seems almost certain. The Taft-Hartley Act itself provided for a joint congressional committee to study and report upon further needed legislation in this field. That committee, whose chairman is Senator Joe Ball, held extensive hearings on amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act in May and June and then decided to postpone its report on these proposals until the new Congress meets in January. Most of the proposals presented to the committee were for further restrictions upon labor. What the new legislation which the next Congress will enact will be will depend upon the composition of the new Congress.

4. The Taft-Hartley Act is not the most extreme antiunion law imaginable and the new legislation which the new Congress may enact may be much more restrictive. The Taft-Hartley Act does not make unions unlawful. It does not require anyone to work when he does not want to work. Most strikes remain lawful and most of the things that unions have been doing are still legal. But the next Congress may further restrict what unions may lawfully do.

5. Even as it now stands, I believe the new law to be unwise legislation. I hold this view because:

(a) The new law, in many respects, leaves labor in a worse position than it was in before the Wagner Act was enacted. As an illustration, the closed shop may be cited. The closed shop was legal in nearly all States before we had a Wagner Act. That act did not make the closed shop legal but restricted its legality, providing that only closed-shop contracts made with majority unions should enjoy the protection of the law. In the Taft-Hartley Act, the closed shop is completely outlawed, as it never was before. In this entire law there is not even one provision which confers additional rights upon unions, while there are dozens of new restrictions.

(b) The act does not treat employers and employees alike. It does not treat corporations and unions in the same manner. Many acts are declared to be unfair labor practices when done by unions which are not unfair labor practices for employers. Corporations can restrict production as they wish, but restrictive rules of unions limiting production are an unfair labor practice for unions. Large corporations can exert pressure upon suppliers and smaller companies not to give labor more favorable terms than they do, but sympathetic strikes and boycotts are an unfair labor practice for unions. No corporation official has to file a non-Communist affidavit to prove his loyalty, as union officers must do. It is not true, as has often been stated, that employers are still subject to same restrictions as they were under the Wagner Act. The list of unfair labor practices of employers is the same as under the Wagner Act, except for the change in the provisions relating to the closed shop. The procedural provisions, however, have been altered to greatly weaken the protection enjoyed by the employees. Unfair labor practices charges are now outlawed unless they are brought within 6 months after commission. In hearings, strict rules of evidence apply, and upon review by the courts the Board's decision is to be sustained, not, as heretofore, if supported by creditable evidence, but only if sustained by the weight of evidence, as viewed by the court. When it comes to enforcement, it is mandatory for the General Counsel to apply for an injunction, in advance of any hearing, whenever he is satisfied that a union has engaged in a sympathetic strike or boycott. He may optionally use injunctions against employers when guilty of unfair labor practices. But up to June 15 the record was that the General Counsel had sought injunctions in 17 cases against labor unions since passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, as against but one case in which he sought an injunction against an employer. The Taft-Hartley Act attempts to change the law of agency applicable to employers to relieve them of responsibility for acts of foremen and other supervisors, while it makes unions responsible, at least under Mr. Denham's interpretation, for all acts of members during strikes and even for those of complete strangers.

(c) The Taft-Hartley Act represents a great extension of governmental interference in labor-management relations. The Wagner Act brought the Government into the picture to the extent of protecting the worker's right to organize and to require an employer to bargain collectively with representatives of a majority of his employees when they so desired. It left entirely free from governmental control the procedures to be followed in collective bargaining and, also what labor and management might agree upon. The Taft-Hartley Act retains all the restrictions which were in the Wagner Act. To them it adds many requirements as to how collective bargaining is to be conducted. Representing an even more serious extension of governmental interference, it contains many restrictions regarding what labor and management may agree upon. These apply to union security, employer contributions to pension, health and welfare funds, production standards, and still other matters previously left entirely to agreement between the parties.

How much governmental interference in labor-management relations has been increased appears most clearly from the increase in the number of NLRB cases. When the Taft-Hartley Act became effective on August 22, 1947, the Board had on its dockets the largest number of undecided cases it had ever had—a total of 3,933 cases. Since then it has labored valiantly to clean up these old cases and to dispose as expeditiously as it can of the many elections it has to conduct under the new law. It has received greatly increased appropriations from Congress and has doubled or trebled its staff. From this point of view, it has also been fortunate in that many unions have not been able to bring cases before it, because many have complied with the requirements for the filing of non-Communist affidavits and financial reports only recently or still have not done so. As late as July 1, 13 AFL international unions and also 13 CIO internationals, as well as three-fourths of all local unions had not met these requirements. Yet, month after month, the backlog of NLRB cases has grown. On April 30, the number of undecided cases totaled 14,467, compared with 3,933, 8 months earlier when the Taft-Hartley Act became law. It is to be noted, moreover, that not only does this act increase the work and authority of the National Labor Relations Board but also that of the courts. The increased resort to injunctions to settle disputes between labor and management is one of the striking consequences of the Taft-Hartley Act to date.

(d) The act has unsettled stable labor-management relationships which have long prevailed in many industries. The building construction industry will serve as an illustration. The Wagner Act never was applied to the construction industry. In the hearings on the Taft-Hartley Act representatives of the leading contractors' association opposed the restrictions on what employers and employees may agree upon in relation to union security and in other respects. The Taft-Hartley Act, however, not only has brought the building construction industry under Federal control but imposed many restrictions upon both employers and unions, with the result that more unfair labor practices have been started against building trades unions than any others. The printing industry is another in which good relations have long prevailed between employers and unions in which the Taft-Hartley Act has produced confusion and serious labor troubles. While that law may be valuable to employers who want to get rid of unions, it complicates the problems of employers who want to get along with unions.

5. The Taft-Hartley Act, while it remains the law of the land, must be enforced and observed. It is entirely proper for unions to challenge in court parts of the new law which they believe to be unconstitutional. It is also in complete harmony with our democratic way of life to work for the repeal or modification of this law and to vote against Members of Congress who were responsible for its passage. But defiance of the law or a deluge of strikes can only result in further restrictive legislation.

Other recent Federal legislation

Having discussed the Taft-Hartley Act at such length, I can only very briefly deal with other labor legislation. Summarizing other recent Federal legislation, the following seem to me to be the high points:

Fair Labor Standards Act: Congress in 1947 amended the Fair Labor Standards (Wages and Hours) Act by passage of the Portal-to-Portal Pay Act. This act set aside the decision of the Supreme Court holding that workers are entitled to count as working time all of the time spent in preparation for actual work and while they are on the employer's premises, it provided that thereafter workers could claim pay for preparation and wash-up time only if such pay was specifically provided for in the contract. This rule was made retroactive, and the courts were instructed to dismiss all of the pending suits for portal-to-portal pay. In addition, Congress in the Portal-to-Portal Act broadened the exemptions from the Fair Labor Standards Act and inserted a 2-year limitation for the recovery of back pay under this law. It also made the Wage and Hour Administration independent of any control by the Secretary of Labor, although it remained within the Department of Labor for budgetary purposes.

In the last session of Congress all proposals for further changes in the Fair Labor Standards Act died in committee without being allowed to come to a vote. These included, on the one hand, several bills to further broaden the exemptions and to increase the hours of labor before overtime must be paid from 40 to 44 and 48. The same fate also befell President Truman's recommendation for increasing the minimum rate of pay from 40 to 75 cents per hour. A Senate subcommittee, headed by Senator Ball, held extensive hearings on this proposal and at one time was reported to be ready to recommend an increase to 60 cents per hour. In the end, however, it did nothing, and the minimum wage rate for employees in interstate commerce remains 40 cents per hour.

Fair employment practices legislation: The story with reference to fair employment practices legislation is very similar. In 1946 Congress allowed the Fair Employment Practices Commission, which was established in wartime by President Roosevelt, to die, although President Truman recommended its continuance. The President renewed this recommendation in the last session and thereby brought down upon himself the wrath of the southern Democrats. The Republican-controlled Congress did nothing.

United States Department of Labor: In relation to the United States Department of Labor, the recent record is one, not merely of doing nothing, but of destroying what already existed. When the Department of Labor was established it was intended to have the same status as other cabinet departments, with responsibility for all functions of the Government concerned with labor and industrial relations. That concept was departed from in the subsequent establishment of special governmental machinery for railroad labor and the organization of the National Labor Relations Board as an independent agency. Then, still in the Roosevelt administration, Congress took the Immigration Service out of the Department of Labor and transferred this service to the Department of Justice. As a wartime measure the United States Employment Service was attached to the War Manpower Commission. This scattering of the governmental activities relating to labor was roundly condemned in the Republican national platform of 1944.

The last Congress—the first Republican-controlled Congress in 16 years—however, not only continued this process but made crippling cuts in the appropriations for the administration of all labor laws other than the Taft-Hartley Act. President Truman, by Executive order, returned the United States Employment Service to the Department of Labor. Congress disapproved of his action and attached the Employment Service to the Social Security Administration. The Children's Bureau was assigned to the same agency. The Wage and Hour Administration was made an independent agency, except for budgetary purposes, in the Portal-to-Portal Act. The Conciliation Service was made completely independent in the Taft-Hartley Act. Left within the Department of Labor are only the Bureau of Labor Statistics and a few smaller bureaus, whose functions are exclusively research. The appropriations to the Department of Labor have been reduced to $14,000,000 in round numbers compared with above $560,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture and $170,000,000 for the Department of Commerce.

Social security: In the field of social security, Congress made one change in the prior law which may result in broadened coverage and made two changes narrowing coverage. It also weakened the Social Security Administration through drastic cuts in its budget. It did nothing with the President's recommendation for a national health insurance system or with those of the Advisory Council on Social Security for broadening and liberalizing old-age insurance.

The one bit of social-security legislation which can be described as a forward step was an amendment to the Social Security Act making it possible for States to contract with the Federal Government to bring their employees and those of their political subdivisions under the Federal old-age insurance system, without disturbing existing State and local retirement systems. Potentially, this might bring 3,500,000 workers, not now covered by the Social Security Act, under that law. But none of them will actually be covered unless and until the several States so elect. It is to their advantage that they do so, but whether State and local government employees will actually get the benefit of this legislation will depend upon the action of the next State legislatures.

Offsetting this potential extension of the coverage of the Federal old-age insurance, were two measures passed by Congress which removed the protection of the act from some 700,000 workers. These were the newsboys and the commission salesmen, both of which Congress declared to be independent contractors, after the Supreme Court had ruled that they are employees entitled to all the benefits of the Social Security Act.

Equally destructive was the action of Congress in cutting the appropriations for the administration of the Social Security Act. The bill passed by the House taking control of unemployment insurance away from the Social Security Administration died in conference. But even the conference-committee bill, which was enacted into law, abolished the regional offices of the Social Security Administration and its research and informational services.

Early in the last session the prospects appeared to be very good that Congress would enact long overdue legislation extending and improving our social-security system. At the beginning of the session, President Truman renewed his recommendation, presented twice earlier, for the establishment of a national system of health insurance and the extension and liberalization of old-age insurance and old-age assistance. A little later the Advisory Council on Social Security, created last fall by the Republican Senate Committee on Finance, made its report, in which it recommended making the coverage of the Federal old-age insurance system wellnigh universal, liberalizing benefits, and inclusion of permanent total disability benefits with old-age retirement benefits. At the same time a subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee began hearings on needed changes in old-age insurance. In the end, however, the entire matter of providing more adequate social security and health protection for the American people was left to the next Congress.

Insuring a continued high level of employment: This also was what Congress did in relation to full employment. After bitter controversy, Congress in 1946 passed the Full Employment Act. This provided for continuous study of all factors affecting the general level of employment by the Board of Economic Advisers and an annual economic report by the President, for consideration by a special joint congressional committee and action by Congress. The Board of Economic Advisers by this time has made two annual and several special reports in which it has stressed that inflation is the great danger to a continued high level of employment. The President in his economic report has presented to Congress the recommendations for the control of inflation made by Board of Economic Advisers. The joint congressional committee has employed experts of its own and has conducted extensive hearings. But it has never made even a report and Congress has done precisely nothing about checking inflation.

State labor legislation

Restrictive State labor relations legislation: The story of the recent State labor legislation, like that of the recent Federal labor legislation, centers around restrictions upon unions. Restrictive State legislation preceded the Taft-Hartley Act by nearly a decade. As long ago as 1939, six States enacted restrictive State labor relations acts, several of them to replace "Little Wagner" acts. More antiunion measures were adopted by the State legislatures in 1941 and 1943. But none of the major industrial States enacted such legislation prior to 1947. None of early restrictive State laws, moreover, were enforced except that of Wisconsin. Even in Wisconsin the enforcement of the restrictions upon the closed shop was so indifferent that the 1945 legislature deemed it advisable to validate all closed contracts which had been in effect illegally since 1939.

In 1947 no less than 30 States enacted laws restricting labor unions and their activities, many of them more than one such law. Included among these were many of the leading industrial States. This antiunion legislation took many different forms: prohibition or restriction of union security provisions in labor-management contracts; right-to-work laws; antipicketing and antiboycott laws, prohibition of strikes without notice, jurisdictional strikes, strikes of public employees and still other strikes; requirements for union registration and financial reporting; compulsory arbitration on public utilities; and still other restrictions upon what workers may do collectively. None of these laws are as comprehensive as the Taft-Hartley Act, but individual provisions are more restrictive. Thus, about a dozen States prohibit all forms of union security and the Taft-Hartley Act has the peculiar provision that in any State which has more drastic restrictions the State law shall apply, but not where the State legislation is less restrictive.

How seriously this mass of new restrictive State labor legislation will harm the labor unions and make it more difficult for workers to get increases or otherwise improve their lot remains to be seen. As has been noted, the earlier restrictive State legislation was little enforced. In many States this legislation fared poorly in the courts, being held unconstitutional. Whether this will prove true also of the 1947 legislation is anybody's guess. The adverse climate of public opinion toward labor, reflected in the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act and the mass of restrictive State labor legislation, seems likely also to result in more vigorous enforcement. It also may again prove true that the courts read the election returns, but here in California the courts have already invalidated the two antilabor laws enacted by the last legislature. Certain it is that the restrictive legislation which was enacted in 1947 was only a small part of the legislation of that character which was introduced in the State legislatures and failed of passage. Almost certainly, all this further restrictive legislation will again make its appearance in the 1949 sessions and whether it will pass will depend upon the composition of the State legislatures which will be elected this year.

Protective labor legislation: Until recently the term "labor legislation" was applied almost exclusively to protective labor legislation—legislation establishing minimum standards for the protection of the weakest among the workers. Such legislation did not directly benefit the organized workers but was always supported by the labor unions, as the champions not only of organized, but of all, labor. Now the very term means to most people legislation restricting labor unions and their activities, but protective labor legislation is still very important and very much in need of improvement. Since the war began we again have had a vast amount of child labor. Despite all progress made in accident prevention, more than 15,000 workers annually lose their lives in industrial accidents. The total man-days lost through strikes in 1946—the worst year we have ever had for strike losses—were 116,000,000, as reported by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, but the man-days lost because of industrial accidents in that year—not an abnormal one from a safety point of view—totaled 260,000,000 as estimated by the National Safety Council. Yet there is far more concern about strikes than about industrial accidents.

For 10 years now almost no progress has been made in protective labor legislation. The 1947 legislative sessions saw a few minor improvements in some States but no thoroughgoing revision of the protective labor laws anywhere. Such a revision is overdue. Many of the existing standards are now completely out of date. Child labor laws limiting the hours of labor of children to 48 per week, as do many of our present child labor laws, are of no protection to young child workers. Neither are minimum wage laws which fix even lower minimum wage rates than does the Fair Labor Standards Act. It is high time that thought be again given to protective labor legislation and not merely to restrictive legislation.

Social-security legislation in the States: In relation to social-security legislation, the record of the 1947 State legislatures was somewhat better. Many States liberalized their unemployment compensation benefits and there was also some improvement in the workmen's compensation laws. But the increase in unemployment or workmen's compensation benefits has not kept pace with the decreasing value of the dollar, so that today they represent a smaller percentage of normal wages than they did when enacted. No basic improvement has been made in our social-security legislation other than the enactment of the cash sickness compensation laws in Rhode Island, California, and New Jersey.

Concluding observations

Viewed in its entirety, the recent labor legislation is most disappointing. What labor should do about it is for your decision. Clearly, the Taft-Hartley Act and the restrictive State laws must be enforced and observed so long as they remain upon the statute books or until they are held unconstitutional. It is entirely proper for the labor unions to test in the courts all parts of the restrictive legislation which they believe to be unconstitutional. It is also in the democratic way of life for people who do not like what their representatives have done to seek to replace them by others who will be more responsive to the people's will. But defiance of law or indifference to public opinion will only lead to further restrictions.

The policy suggested is in accord with the traditions of American labor. Labor has ever been reluctant to engage in partisan politics. But there never has been a time when labor has not been interested in legislation affecting its interests. From its organization, the American Federation of Labor has maintained its headquarters in Washington and has favored and opposed measures pending in Congress. It has been always interested itself in protective labor legislation and, still more, in removing restrictions upon freedom of organization and action. In its early years it championed repeal of the conspiracy laws. Later it fought for legislation to curb the use of injunctions in labor disputes. It was instrumental in securing passage of the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and the State anti-injunction laws. Long ago, under the leadership of Samuel Gompers, it adopted the policy of reward your friends and punish your enemies in elections. It has always applied this policy in congressional elections and has also advised its members of the stand taken on measures of concern to labor in national platforms and by candidates for the Presidency. In now entering politics to secure the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the restrictive State labor laws, but doing so cautiously, labor is pursuing the same policy it has found successful in the past.

How badly the unions will be harmed by the recent restrictive legislation will depend, in large part, upon what they do and do not do from now on. On the one hand, labor needs to avoid further arousing hostile public opinion. It needs to tell its story to employers and the general public much better than it has done to date. It also needs to sell itself to the large number of workers among its own members now indifferent or hostile. Having attained maturity, it must act responsibly at all times. On the other hand, labor needs to continue its organizational efforts and its fight for improved conditions for its members and all workers, along with trying to get relief from the injustices of the recent labor legislation. Despite this legislation, it is lawful for workers to organize and they still enjoy governmental protection in doing so. Most everything that unions have done heretofore remains legal. Labor does not have to take it lying down and, if I correctly interpret its attitude, it is not yet licked, by a long shot. In fighting for its rights, it advances the welfare, not only of all working people, but of our great country and its democratic institutions.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong in any way the remarks which are being made with regard to the program of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, which will begin its hearings tomorrow, but, in all fairness to everyone concerned, I think I should state that at the beginning of the hearings tomorrow we shall start with the testimony of the Secretary of Labor, and we hope to be able to accomplish certain things. What the committee did may be criticized, but the people of the whole country, from one end to the other, have been hearing much more than a political slogan in connection with the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. It is true that in every hamlet, in every county in the United States, Democratic speakers from one end of the country to the other promised repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. What the Republican speakers did I do not know.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I do not wish to yield at the present moment. There will be plenty of time later. I wish to explain exactly the position in which the committee finds itself.

Mr. President, it is easy to make a political slogan. It is easy to say, "We want to repeal the Taft-Hartley law." But everyone knows that the Taft-Hartley Act was an amendment to existing legislation, and that the Taft-Hartley provisions are so intertwined with the National Labor Relations Act that if we should attempt to go to the country on that simple slogan, we would wipe out the National Labor Relations Act, which is something that no one ever dreamed of doing, and we would have to start at the place where we began over a decade ago.

There are certain provisions in regard to the procedure which we undertook which could be settled readily by action of the committee. For example, there was no need of discussing the hearings, so far as the intent of the majority of the committee was concerned, having to do with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which are to be repealed. If we happen to set the stage in such a way that one political party takes one side of the controversy and the other political party takes the other, that cannot be helped. But if, as a result of the action taken, the political party which made the promise to the people of the country can better comply with that promise, that is fair, open, and above-board. Probably never in the history of the United States, after an election in which people spoke so plainly as they spoke in this instance, has a political party been more strongly pledged to go through with the whole program. But in adopting any program, a start must be made. That is all we have done. We have not tried to modify the rules of the Senate or of the Congress in regard to hearings, excepting to put a limitation on their length. The reason for that is that we have, by the first proposition, closed the door to any discussion as to whether in the minds of the members of the committee it is wise to attempt to repeal the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which were passed a year ago. That is a question which has now been decided. We do not have to hold hearings on that question. On that point we can save very much time. If we do not save it, each witness could come before the committee and say, "You cannot repeal the Taft-Hartley Act without destroying a whole decade of experience under the National Labor Relations Act."

Our next step is to restore, in theory and in spirit, the legislation as it existed before the Taft-Hartley law came into existence, and then to attempt to change it in such a manner as will implement the original act to the extent that the President of the United States has already made recommendations which the people of the United States have heard. It may be said that his speech was not political because it was made in a message to the Congress of the United States on the state of the Union.

I think the time has come in the United States when if any President who has made promises from one end of the country to the other, and has made recommendations to the Congress as specific as are those which President Truman has made, can reasonably expect that his recommendations will receive attention.

Mr. President, I do not know how well our committee will hold together in making decisions, but in my mind, and, I think, in the minds of all members of the committee—and I know, in the mind of the junior Senator from Oregon, who has just finished speaking—we shall write an honest, good labor act. I know that the junior Senator from Oregon wants to write an honest, good labor act which will take care of the interests of labor and the interests of industry, so that we may move forward toward industrial-labor stability and industrial-labor peace. That is what all of us want.

We can criticize until doomsday the method of procedure; but since the method has been adopted, I, for one, shall not criticize it. I would rather have it in some other form. But let us be frank about things. If we can unite a majority of a committee of the Senate of the United States on a given method of procedure, we have accomplished something in the Senate which does not always happen.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I refused to yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and I do not wish to yield to other Senators until my statement is concluded.

So far as I am concerned, I shall not try to cut off debate. I am ready to meet all the issues as they develop, and I want to meet them fairly and squarely, not with a slogan, not based on what someone thinks or what someone is talking about. We want to be able to report to the Senate a proper type of bill so that we can debate it and tell the Senate what we have attempted to accomplish.

We shall begin the hearings tomorrow. Whether we succeed depends upon the action of every Senator, but we shall try to do our level best to carry through the program which we have attempted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to one or two minor facts regarding the so-called mandate. Far be it from me, being a Republican, to say what the Democratic Party has promised to do or what it has not promised to do. But there is something about this mandate to which I should like to call attention.

In the first place, of the Members now sitting in the House of Representatives a majority were elected who favored the Taft-Hartley law.

Of the 32 Senators who were elected to the Senate this year, 18 were in favor of the Taft-Hartley law and 13 were against it; the position of one Senator I do not know. How can that be construed to be a popular mandate for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law? So far as the actual figures are concerned, I know that in 17 industrial counties in the State of Ohio Mr. Dewey ran stronger than he ran 4 years ago. In 71 out of 73 rural counties he ran weaker than he ran 4 years ago. He lost 150,000 votes in the rural counties. The results are practically the same. Four years ago he won by 12,000, this year he lost by 6,000, in a population of 3,000,000. He gained in the industrial counties, and lost in the rural areas. We made the best showing in the city of Cleveland we ever made since I have been active in Ohio politics. These are just a few sidelights. There are no doubt many other arguments which will be made as we proceed in discussing this question, but if the figures I have given do not disprove that the American people, in voting for Senators, Representatives, and for President and Vice President, in any way gave anyone a mandate to repeal the Taft-Hartley law, I do not know what better evidence there could be.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah be kind enough to answer one or two inquiries I may propound with regard to his remarks?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be happy to do so if I can. The Senator from Missouri generally is so erudite that he is over my head, and I simply cannot answer his questions; but I shall do the best I can.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for that very direct response to my question. The first question I desire to ask the Senator is this: As bearing on the reasonableness of the length of time which is granted for the hearings, is it not a fact that the Senator from Utah himself, until the day on which the period up to February 10 was fixed, was himself in favor of a 30-day period of hearings?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I thank the Senator for asking that question. I actually argued against fixing any limitation, from a practical standpoint, because I have always found, in my experience that when one is imposed, it is hard to keep to it, and I am pretty sure we are going to have difficulty in keeping to the time; but the committee decided on it, and we are going to try our best to carry out its decision.

Mr. DONNELL. So the Senator from Utah voted in favor of the action taken by the committee, did he not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. When the vote came, I voted with the other seven Democrats on the committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Prior to that meeting, however, the Senator from Utah, who is now on his feet, had favored a 30-day period for the hearings. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I favored no limitation.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator favored no limitation?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should be very much happier now if we had done what we were trying to work out in our discussion, namely to aim toward a limitation, instead of prescribing it. But the limitation has been imposed by the majority of the committee.

Mr. DONNELL. In fact, by all of the Democratic members of the committee, including the Senator from Utah. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I voted with my colleagues, and I am happy to do the best I can now.

Mr. DONNELL. I ask the Senator, further, did he not give out a statement to the effect that he favored a period of 30 days being granted for hearings?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, no statement that I know of. Undoubtedly, as every reporter asked after the meeting, when we were discussing the motion of the Senator from Oregon about attempting to stop on the 1st of March, I said that, judging from the discussion, it would probably take longer than the 1st of March.

Mr. DONNELL. That was because the Senator from Utah realized that the time fixed in the resolution presented by the Senator from Florida and adopted would expire on February 10. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true, and, as I said in my statement, whenever six of my colleagues, or seven of my colleagues, unite upon a program, it is not hard for the eight of the colleagues to go along, because that does not happen very often in our committees.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator a question also in regard to the length of time which will be actually available for these hearings under the resolution adopted by the 8 to 5 vote? We are to begin, I understand, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. That is, on January 28. I have made a notation from which it appears that, excluding Sundays but including Saturdays, a series of hearings expiring February 10 will give us 12 days. Does the Senator agree with that?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I would not dispute the Senator's figures, because if I worked them out I think it would be found they were correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it not also true that it is provided in the LaFollette-Monroney Act namely, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, that "No standing committee of the Senate or the House, except the Committee on Rules of the House, shall sit, without special leave, while the Senate or the House, as the case may be, is in session." That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true. That has already cut down the meetings of our committee, and we had discussion of that very point.

Mr. DONNELL. We have thirteen members of the Senate on that committee. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Absolutely correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Senator anticipate that during the period between tomorrow morning at ten o'clock and the tenth day of February there will be sessions of the Senate, which, under this language, will preclude the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare from sitting except with special leave of the Senate? That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. All excepting the first part. I do not think there will be a meeting of the Senate between now and 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. DONNELL. I did not say that. I said between 10 o'clock tomorrow morning and February 10——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The remainder of the Senator's statement is perfectly correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I did not say the first part of it as the Senator attributed it to me. I asked the Senator whether or not he anticipated——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I understood the Senator to start counting right from now until tomorrow, the time the Senate will be in session, and I merely wished to correct him, if that was what he said, by stating that it was not correct.

Mr. DONNELL. In the first place, I submit that the Senate is in session at this moment, if the Senator desires to start from this instant, and, in the second place, that the hearings concerning which we were talking do not start until tomorrow morning. Therefore obviously I was not referring to any session this afternoon.

I wish to ask the Senator if he does not anticipate that at least several days during the period from January 28 until February 10 will be consumed, at least in part, in sessions of the United States Senate itself?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I assume quite a few hours will be consumed.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it not also a fact that during the period which will expire February 10 there will be several days when, the Senator reasonably anticipates, some of the Republican members, in order to fill engagements relative to Lincoln Day celebrations, and the like, will find it necessary to be absent from Washington, D. C.?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I thought that by stopping on February 10 we would provide for not interfering with any of the goings and comings in connection with the Lincoln Day celebration, but if I am mistaken in that, and the Republicans have to leave on the 10th, then probably we have unfairly treated them, and should allow a little bit more time so that those Republicans who have to leave will have a chance to return. I think that will be granted almost as a matter of course.

Mr. DONNELL. The bill introduced by the Senator from Utah, if I may ask him the question, provides among its terms for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, does it not?

Mr THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. And was not that bill referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare for consideration by that committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. The only consideration the committee has given to it was at the executive session held the other day, without the taking of testimony. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I would say that no consideration has been given to that bill, and ordinarily in the practice of the Senate the committees do not consider a bill until after hearings are concluded. Therefore we are starting in the orderly process, so that we can get to the consideration, and until the hearings are completed we cannot go into consideration of the bill. That was one reason why the majority of the committee decided we must rush the hearings.

Mr. DONNELL. Consequently we have the situation in which the reference of a bill to our committee—a bill which by the very opening portion of its provisions provides for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act—is not to mean that we are to wait until after we have heard the testimony, but we are to decide, as we did the other day, in advance of any testimony whatsoever, contrary, as the Senator has said, to the usual custom, for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I had hoped, and I still hope, that so far as the question of the repeal of the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act is concerned, it does not have to be argued.

Mr. DONNELL. And the Senator, I believe, answered the other day in the committee meeting in response to a question, that he interprets the resolution adopted by the committee as providing that the only amendments which are to be considered by the committee in the public hearings are those which are consistent with the President's proposal. Is not that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that is correct. I do not believe that generally speaking in hearings amendments offered by various Senators on the committee become part of the hearing process unless we are building up legislation. Everything has happened, Mr. President, in our hearings. We do not follow an absolute rule. But generally speaking the hearings are held on provisions which are before us, or which are promised to be before us. There is no attempt to stop any Senator from discussing questions in committee. There is no attempt to stop any Senator from debating on the floor of the Senate. There is no way I know of to cut off debate without agreement in the Senate. There is absolutely a right to offer amendments from now on as long as the Senate will stand for that sort of thing. We are not attempting to cut off any of those procedures. We are merely attempting to get started, and we found that that was a real struggle in our committee. We found it was a struggle in our country, because of the agitation in regard to the subject. We are starting, and we trust to the gods for the finish.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator one or two concluding questions. I think the Senator from Utah heard the Senator from Florida——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am sorry to say that I did not hear my colleague from Florida, so probably the Senator from Missouri had better ask him the questions about what he said.

Mr. DONNELL. I remember well what the Senator from Florida said. I wanted to get the idea of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I will have to say that, being a good Democrat, as the Senator from Florida is, while I did not hear what he said I can stand up and testify that all he said was absolutely true [laughter], because I know the man. That is as far as I can go. But I hate to be asked questions by a great Senate lawyer respecting what the Senator from Florida said, because I did not hear him speak. But I can imagine what the Senator from Florida said.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand that the Senator from Utah is perfectly willing to take on faith what was said by the Senator from Florida, and I am not disputing his right to do so.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I take on faith what was said by the Senator from Florida. I used to trust implicitly even the present Presiding Officer of the United States Senate [laughter]. That is going as far I think as a man can go.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood the Senator from Florida to say that it would be perfectly proper, after the hearings are closed and the committee is in executive session, for a member of the committee to present an amendment. But, said the Senator from Florida, not in the public hearings. Now I think that is correctly quoting the Senator from Florida, who is listening as I speak, and sitting at his desk.

May I ask the Senator from Utah whether or not he thinks it is within the fair range of possibilities that our committee might possibly derive some benefit from testimony of witnesses in public hearings on an amendment that might be presented by a Senator, and whether or not the Senator judges it to be advisable to confine discussion behind closed doors at an executive session, free from the interposition of the testimony of the public, of amendments which have been so sacredly and silently presented behind closed doors?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the Senator knows that amendments are sometimes suggested by a witness, sometimes suggested by a Senator, without being formally submitted, but which in fact we very often discuss as ideas long before they are in the form of amendments. There is no way of stopping that and there is no intention to stop it. The Senator also knows that the complementary amendments, or the amendments which are to complement or fulfill the President's program, are at the present time in the state of being written, and not yet perfected. So that those amendments will be submitted in the Senate and formally referred as soon as they are ready. I am ready to confess, and I admit it to the whole country, that the adoption of the motion, for which I voted, has hurried us probably on to a place where we are not completely prepared. But by the time we get going I am sure we will be wholly prepared to act on the matters which are being discussed.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator whether the amendments which are to be prepared, which he says are in process of preparation, on which we are to open hearings tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, will be before our committee at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, or are they still unprepared?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They may or may not be. They have not been perfected yet in time to submit them today. But they will be ready the first minute they become available.

Mr. DONNELL. So we are to proceed tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock to hear testimony on certain amendments, according to the Pepper resolution, as to the preparation and completion of which by 10 o'clock tomorrow morning the Senator from Utah cannot now give us assurance? Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No. When the Senator comes into the hearings tomorrow morning, there will be before the committee a long bill providing for the repeal of the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. DONNELL. But, the Senator said, the committee is not going to hear any testimony on that. Is not that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, we are not going to hear any testimony whether we will repeal it or not, but the bill will contain other provisions, and then there is the substitute, and in addition to that there is one provision which has to be decided, because there is a substitute for it. The bill carries an amendment, as the Senator from Missouri well knows, which is open to discussion, and which is something about which anyone may testify as to whether it is proper to continue the panelization, the 5-man board provided for in the present Labor Relations Act.

Everyone knows that when we call before a committtee a member of the President's Cabinet, the Secretary of Labor for illustration, we always give him a chance to do more than to make a simple statement and run away. If no member of the committee were to ask him any questions it would be the first time that has ever happened in my experience in the United States Senate. If such questions do not open up discussions, so that we can understand what the Secretary recommends to us, or the reasons why he makes the recommendations, I shall be very much surprised. I am pretty sure that there is enough material to keep—I was going to say even the Senator from Missouri going—but to keep all of us going tomorrow in the session we shall hold then. I say that because the Senator is asking me quite a number of questions, and I am hard put to answer every one, because I am the kind of fellow who is not used to answering questions.

Mr. DONNELL. I think the Senator from Utah is always very expert in answering questions, and is very clear in his answers.

As I understand, however, the Senator talks about taking testimony on the panelization, that is, whether or not the board shall consist of five men instead of three. That, according to the resolution adopted by the committee the other day, is a matter which is already decided.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, Mr. President.

Mr. DONNELL. That is what the resolution provides, if I am not greatly mistaken.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, that is not decided.

Mr. DONNELL. The resolution speaks for itself. At any rate the resolution provides that it is decided that the Taft-Hartley law shall be repealed. That is decided, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is decided, so far as the majority of the committee is concerned. I want the people of the country—every man, woman, and child who can read, listen to the radio, or watch television—to know that so far as Democratic Senators on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare are concerned, they are trying their best to fulfill what nearly all of them who campaigned promised. That is all.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. The resolution provides, does it not, that the Taft-Hartley law shall be repealed, except as to the point of panelization, to which the Senator refers?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. And the five-man board.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the panelization point.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The panelization question arose incidental to the five-man board. Panelization makes it possible for the board to divide up and hear several cases.

Mr. DONNELL. The action taken by our committee the other day, by a vote of 8 to 5, includes among its provisions the statement that the Taft-Hartley law shall be repealed, except as to the continuance of the five-man board.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. So we have already decided those issues in our committee by a vote of 8 to 5.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. We have also decided, by a vote of 8 to 5, that we are going to reenact the Wagner Act.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. So, according to the Senator's view, there is no occasion to have testimony on either the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law or the reenactment of the Wagner Act. Is not that true?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I need no testimony; and I believe that if that were all there were to it, we could report the bill without any hearings whatever. But the Senator from Missouri very well remembers that in his message to Congress the President of the United States made other proposals, and those proposals have been placed before us by the President. I deem it our duty to pay attention to them. At least 3 or 4 weeks ago I put the various legal authorities in our Government to work to try to draft amendments consistent with those proposals. Everyone knows that we cannot simply repeal and restore. That is what I said in my opening statement. But we shall have amendments which I think the Senator from Missouri would say at least satisfy the President's message.

Mr. DONNELL. The language of the resolution, as to what our hearings are to address themselves to, is this, is it not:

> That hearings begin forthwith on amendments to the Wagner Act consistent with the proposals made by the President.

That is a correct statement of what is in the resolution, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. Those amendments, so far as the Senator from Utah knows, have not actually been completed. Is that true?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. But I am pretty sure that the Secretary of Labor will talk about them, so that we shall at least have the theory. I am sorry that we have not the amendments now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have heard a great deal of discussion here this afternoon to the effect that on the 10th of February it is planned by the committee to terminate the hearings and to report a bill from the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Not to report a bill on February 10.

Mr. TYDINGS. But it is planned to terminate the hearings on February 10. In the event the committee, having set that date as a tentative target, should find on the 9th or the 10th that it is advisable to extend the hearings for two or three days or a week longer, is there anything in the Constitution of the United States, the laws of the Republic, the rules of the Senate, or the procedure of that committee, which would prevent it from doing so?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I know of nothing.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Even though it is true, of course, that we can extend the time, the language of the resolution adopted by a vote of 8 to 5 on January 24, I believe, is "That said hearings be closed not later than February 10, 1949." Is not that true?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is the aim.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the language, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Chairman of the Committee has appointed a subcommittee to direct the witnesses and to attempt to bring the hearings to a conclusion at that time.

Mr. DONNELL. The notice which the Senator from Utah has sent to various members of the committee states that the subcommittee is appointed to expedite the hearings. Is not that language used?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Congress can pass the Taft-Hartley law and then proceed shortly thereafter to repeal it or amend it, it seems to me that the committee, within its less confined authority, could change the date of the 10th either forward or backward. In that connection it could do anything it desired to do if it were supported by the majority of the committee.

So all this talk to the effect that the end of the world is coming on the 10th of February, and that if dire circumstances intervene to make it seem desirable the hearings cannot be prolonged for a week or a month, is just so much surplusage.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. We have got into such a maze of details that I think it should be pointed out to the Senate that we did not say February 10, 1949. So we can find a date which will be satisfactory to everyone when the time comes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I think it has been most fortunate that we have had this debate this afternoon, because we are now 1 day in advance of schedule so far as hearings on the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law are concerned. I compliment the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare for setting a time limit on the hearings.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I decline to yield at the moment. The Senator from Missouri has had a long day. After having heard the Senator from Missouri cross-examine the Senator from Utah, I am convinced that I shall be more strongly than ever in favor of eliminating filibusters.

Mr. President, I have heard my distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle grow rather vehement in attempting to convey to the public of America the idea that someone is going to be seriously injured because of the action of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in deciding that these hearings should be concluded by February 10.

If there is any one thing that the Congress of the United States needs in connection with hearings before committees, it is expedition and dispatch. If there is any one thing for which the Congress of the United States is consistently and properly criticized, it is the conducting of protracted hearings upon a subject with which every member of the committee is wholly familiar from beginning to end.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to yield to my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does it not occur to the Senator from Illinois that it is rather ridiculous for some Members of this body to insist that the rule of cloture be reenforced so that debate can be brought to a close, and then, with just the opposite purpose, find fault with a situation in the committee which is considering this bill?

Mr. LUCAS. It is wholly inconsistent.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. I decline to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood, Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. No, Mr. President; I decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if there is any one thing needed in the Congress of the United States, it is the expedition of hearings, so that the findings of a committee, in the nature of a report, can be brought to the floor of the Senate and the Senate may take action before the last week of the session. How many times has the distinguished Vice President sat in the seat I now occupy during the closing days of a session, when a great deal of pending legislation was piled high on the table before us, when we had to consider one bill after another, and yet not one Senator among 15 knew anything about the merits or demerits of the bills. At such times, Mr. President, we have had all-day sessions and all-night sessions, sessions beginning at 11 o'clock in the morning and continuing to midnight and on into the morning hours. However, Senators on the Republican side of the aisle now talk about attempts to cram something down the throat of the Congress, because of an attempt to expedite these hearings. Mr. President, everyone remembers last summer, the chaos and turmoil when we finally concluded our general session, with respect to the log jam of legislation which was here upon this desk. If I can do a single thing, as majority leader of the Senate, to expedite the hearings before our committees, I shall do so, the Senator from Oregon to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Illinois will recall very well that on the last day of the session, when our friends on the other side of the aisle were in control, the eminent and able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] virtually wrote the farm bill—with no hearings on it at all—with a pair of scissors, right there at the clerk's desk.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to reply to such a ridiculous statement?

Mr. LUCAS. I am delighted to yield to my good friend the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I had nothing to do with writing the farm bill at any time. The farm bill was considered at length in the Committee on Agriculture. It was approved by both the Democratic and Republican members of the committee, and then came to the Senate.

The only thing we did the last night was to agree with the House of Representatives that we would not put it into effect until 1950. That was the only change made the last night. However, I had very little to do with that, although I was glad to make that concession to the House of Representatives and go along with the members of the Agricultural Committee, who were really completely in charge of the bill. That is all I had to do with the farm bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that it was the housing bill that the Senator from Ohio had at the desk and operated on with a pair of scissors. I remember very well seeing the eminent Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] with a pair of scissors clipping out the paragraphs and pasting them together—with no hearings at all, but asking the country to accept a bill written in that way, and carrying with it several millions of dollars of expense.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, in order to make the record clear, although the Senator from Maryland did correct himself, and subsequently said that it was the housing bill that he had reference to, nevertheless I wish to state that the Senate Committee on Agriculture held hearings all during the fall and summer of 1947, in preparation of the material which was written into the farm bill; and the Department of Agriculture had the farm bill before it time after time, and made recommendations to the committee as to what should be incorporated into the bill. That is how the farm bill was written. I wish to be sure the record is straightened out in that connection.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was the housing bill that I should have referred to originally. However, inasmuch as the farm bill has come up for discussion, let me say that it was passed on the last night of the session, I understand, after a very important telephone call from Philadelphia, whence word came, not from Senators, nor Members of the House of Representatives, that "If we do not have a farm bill to go before the country with in the next election, we might as well stay home."

Well, Mr. President, they were partly right, even without the farm bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I dislike to be discourteous to my colleagues, Mr. President, so I yield once more. However, I do not care to say very much more about this matter.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I was on the conference committee, and I conferred closely with all the other members of the conference committee that last evening, and I know all that took place there. I wish to say to the able Senator from Maryland that so far as I was concerned, I was not "in" on the telephone conversation, if there was one.

Mr. LUCAS. That is understandable, inasmuch as the Senator is from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I only wish to say, in regard to the housing bill, that elaborate hearings were held on that bill over a long period of time. As the Senator knows, the trouble arose because of the difficulty in getting the House of Representatives to agree to various provisions and in enacting a bill at all. But so far as I know, we wrote in no provisions at the last moment; and so far as I can recollect, every provision was given serious consideration by the committee.

As the Senator knows, at the last moment, in conferences between the House of Representatives and the Senate to try to eliminate differences, one does have to make concessions and does have to eliminate things which one would like to see included in the measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will further yield, let me say that is all very well, but my point is that we had 10 minutes of consideration of a conglomerated bill, and then passed that bill, on which no hearings were held.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I decline to yield further.

I wish to read for a moment what the Reorganization Act says in regard to the adjournment of the Congress. Every Senator knows this. Section 132 of the Reorganization Act is as follows:

> Except in time of war or during a national emergency proclaimed by the President, the two Houses shall adjourn sine die not later than the last day (Sundays excepted) in the month of July in each year unless otherwise provided by the Congress.

That is exactly what we have to do if we comply with the Reorganization Act. In view of all the legislation that is bound to come before the Congress, I ask now, from the floor of the Senate, each and every committee—not only the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, but every other committee—to do everything within its power to expedite its hearings; and if any Senator should object to having a Senate committee sit while the Senate itself is in session—which any Senator has a perfect right to do, of course—it is better now for the committees to work at night, rather than for the Senate of the United States to work day and night during the last 2 weeks of the session, for under those circumstances Senators will not know, half the time, what they are doing regarding important controversial issues and amendments which appear before the Members of the Senate for their determination.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. No, I cannot yield at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not wish to be discourteous to my friend the Senator from California, but I should like to finish what I have to say. I shall be through in just a moment.

Mr. President, there is not a single member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, even including the new members on the Democratic side, who would need to take longer time to consider what legislation amendatory of the Wagner Act is needed. Of course, so far as the present minority is concerned, all of the former members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare still serve on that committee. In view of all the hearings the committee has held and all the information it has, how can anyone say that the committee must take more time to consider what must be done with respect to legislation amendatory of the Wagner Act?

I do not say the matter we have been discussing is the only matter they will consider. I am not in control of that committee, Mr. President. As the Senator from Ohio said a moment ago, in the case of some portion of the Taft-Hartley law as to which there is no question at all or no controversy as between labor and management—for instance, some portion of it that has worked effectively—of course it must be obvious to all that amendments based on such important matters would be given consideration.

But the Presidential proposals are the basic things they are going to consider; and so far as the majority are concerned they are not going to be led astray by any long, dilatory tactics, attempting to defeat by that method what ought to be done with respect to the platform pledge that the Democrats made in their Philadelphia convention. I want to congratulate again the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, so far as the Democrats are concerned, in doing exactly what they have done, because it means expedition, it means dispatch, it means that the Senate will have a better opportunity on the floor of debating the issue, by bringing it to the floor as soon as that can possibly be done, rather than waiting until the dying days of the eighty-first session.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, apropos of the remarks recently made by the able majority leader, the Senator from Illinois, I want to take this opportunity of commending him on urging at least reasonable dispatch of the public's business. I may say for the information of the majority leader, though no doubt he has been adequately informed already, that we are very hopeful the Committee on Rules, of which the able Senator from Arizona is chairman, will be able to terminate its hearings tomorrow on the cloture rule amendment, and will have it up on the floor of the Senate. I hope we may have the full cooperation of the able majority leader to expedite consideration of the cloture amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad the Senator brings up that question. I made the sweeping statement a moment ago with reference to the chairmen of all committees that I hope every committee will attempt to bring legislation that is acted upon favorably to the floor of the Senate as soon as possible.

I know how very much interested the able Senator from California has been in attempting to report an amendment to the cloture rule from the Committee on Rules and Administration. I have been following the subject in the newspapers, and I have seen the Senator from California make the headlines almost every day in demanding action, morning, afternoon, and night, and insisting that they bring something before the Senate. I wish the Senator had been as insistent on that position 2 years ago as he is now. He is a member of the committee, and as I recall the records show the committee after holding hearings on January 28, February 4, 11, and 18, finally on April 3, 1947, reported a resolution which was the same in character as the one now being considered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may say to the able Senator from Illinois that I am perfectly willing to let the record speak for itself. The Senator from California, ever since he came to the Senate, and after he had an opportunity to observe the obstructionist tactics which can take place through the use of the filibuster, has consistently supported an amendment to the cloture rule of the Senate, and has been endeavoring to have it adopted just as rapidly as it could be done with the parliamentary situation facing us. I am willing to let the record speak for itself.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator is probably correct, but he has never shown as much enthusiasm for it as he shows now. And I wonder why? The only Senator on his side of the aisle who ever demonstrated real enthusiasm, so far as I could find from the record, was the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. The Senator well knows that the rule which was reported by his committee in April 1947, 2 years ago, remained for 15 months on the calendar without the Senator from California ever raising his voice once to try to bring up the rule for debate before the Senate. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may say to the able Senator from Illinois that he is not correct in his statement. In the first place, let me remind the Senator from Illinois that the Senator from California proposed an amendment to the rules early in the session of the Eightieth Congress, and asked for early committee hearings. He did everything he could to secure action on the amendment we then had pending before the Senate, calling for majority cloture, a majority of the full membership of the Senate. The amendment was not reported favorably by the committee. A substitute amendment was brought to the floor of the Senate. At that time some of the Democratic members of the committee had indicated to the committee that if the more moderate resolution were reported, they thought there would be an opportunity of getting the support of Senators on their side of the aisle. So far as the Senator from California could discover, during that entire period of time, what he had at least hoped would be an indication of support never materialized.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not care anything about what the Senator believes about the support he was to receive from this side. The only thing I am talking about, I repeat, is that the Senator from California for some very unusual, peculiar reason, becomes overly excited about having brought to the floor the resolution now pending before the Committee on Rules and Administration. The Senator has been in the newspapers every day. He is demanding of the chairman of the Rules and Administration Committee that hearings be held, morning, afternoon, and night. The Senator wants action. The Senator never showed such enthusiasm before. That is all right; I am not objecting to it. The only thing I am saying to the Senator from California is that today he is exhibiting for a cloture amendment an enthusiasm which he did not demonstrate 2 years ago, notwithstanding the fact that he was for it.

I do not want to be misunderstood upon this proposition, Mr. President. I hope and I know that the committee will act on this matter soon, and report it to the Senate, but I cannot control the actions of the committee. The Senator is on that committee, and he has something to do with it. When the committee reports the resolution, that will be the time to talk about it. But I am sure that if the Senator will just keep prodding he will finally get it to the floor of the Senate even though his position today is wholly inconsistent with his position when the Republicans were in power.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may say to the able Senator from Illinois on that score that Members of the Senate, as do individuals elsewhere in the world, I think, learn a great deal through experience. The Senator from California in the 3 years he has been privileged to serve as a Member of this body has certainly learned that unless an amendment to the rules of this nature is brought before the Senate of the United States in the early days of the session, there is no opportunity of obtaining consideration for it. If the Senator from California seems to be a little aggressive along these lines, I can assure the Senator from Illinois that it is because of the experience I have gained in this honorable body, that action should be taken early in the session, and unless those who are advocating it are merely giving it lip service, they should join in getting early consideration by the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think the Republican Party is fooling the country by the tremendous enthusiasm which some of its members are showing, because there was a proposed amendment to the cloture rule on the calendar for 15 months in the past 2 years, and I do not recall that the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee ever stood on the floor of the Senate and made a motion to have it considered so that some action could be taken with reference to it. That is the only point I am making. I do not want the Senators to become too discouraged about the matter. Do not push us and shove us too much, because I do not think the Senators are in a proper position to do that.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Illinois that I support the statement of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. The proposed change in the rule was placed on the calendar in February 1947, early in the session, but at no time after that could there be any assurance of an opportunity to consider the question without a lengthy debate, two or three weeks or a month, because at all times other matters came forward which had to be acted on for the best interests of the country. The most persistent Senator that I know of, because it was my measure that was on the calendar, and he was constantly talking about it, was the Senator from California.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is wonderful to see Massachusetts and California together.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) extending the time for free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) extending the time for free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AUTHORIZATION FOR VICE PRESIDENT TO SIGN ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, not withstanding the adjournment of the Senate today, the Vice President be authorized to sign the enrolled House Joint Resolution 112 making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes. I understand that the joint resolution has been passed by the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCES IN MALMEDY CASE

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in a news article released, apparently, on January 6, and which appeared in the New York Times, it was announced that an Army commission, headed by Justice Gordon Simpson, of the Texas Supreme Court, recommended that death sentences be commuted to life imprisonment or less for 29 convicted Nazi war criminals, 12 of whom had taken part in the "Malmedy massacre" of American prisoners in 1944.

Under date of January 17 there appeared an article in Time magazine which is headed "War crimes," from which I should like to quote very briefly. The subheading of the article is "Clemency." I read as follows:

> The Malmedy massacre of captured United States soldiers, during the Battle of the Bulge in December 1944, was one of the most vicious atrocities committed by Germans in combat during the war. By the testimony of one survivor (who escaped by feigning death after he was shot in the foot), some 160 United States soldiers were lined up in a snow-covered field, 8 deep and 20 abreast, and raked by machine-gun fire for 3 minutes.
>
> The survivor heard the "agonized screams" of wounded and dying comrades, and single pistol shots—coups de grace administered by Germans who walked among the fallen victims after the machine-gunning stopped.
>
> After war's end, the Germans responsible for the massacre fell into Allied hands. Among them were two S. S. big wigs, Gen. Josef ("Sepp") Dietrich, commander of the Sixth Armored Division, and Col. Joachim Peiper, of the 1st Armored Regiment (known as "Peiper's Task Force").

The article goes on to say that the matter was brought up for investigation and that, as a result of an investigation, the commutations of sentence were granted.

I was interested in the matter, Mr. President, because one of the men who took part in the prosecutions and in securing evidence for the prosecutions of the Germans who committed this most heinous offense is a young man in the State of Connecticut. I have known him for a long time. He was admitted to the bar in Connecticut and went into the Army as an enlisted man in the last war. He finally rose to the rank of an officer and was assigned to the Judge Advocate General's department and saw a great deal of overseas service. A part of his duty overseas was to work in the preparation of cases having to do with the prosecution of the Germans who perpetrated the Malmedy massacre.

The article from which I have quoted goes on to explain that the reason why the sentences were commuted, apparently, is because of the methods used by the prosecuting investigators and officers in securing confessions from the Germans who had taken part in this vicious massacre of unarmed troops who had surrendered and were entitled to be treated as prisoners of war under all the rules which have been in force for many years governing the conduct of warfare. The implication is that this young man used improper, illegal, and vicious methods to secure the testimony and handle the prosecutions.

Under date of July 13, 1948, this young man wrote me a letter from which I shall quote briefly. He says:

> There were 74 who were tried in this case—

Meaning the case involving the Malmedy massacre—

> including the commanding general of the Sixth SS Panzer Army, Lt. Gen. "Sepp" Dietrich, and most of the subordinate commanders who were responsible for these atrocities against American prisoners of war and Belgian civilians. It is my recollection that there was only one acquittal. There were over 40 of the accused who were sentenced to be hanged. Quite a few were sentenced to life imprisonment. Some of those more remote in the chain of command were sentenced to relatively short terms.

I may say, Mr. President, it developed in the investigation of the matter that these commanding officers had been given orders by the German high command, and they had passed those orders down to their troops, that in this Battle of the Bulge not one single prisoner, military or civilian, was to be taken; that they were to be shot down ruthlessly, whether or not they offered to surrender, or whether they had surrendered.

Then the writer of the letter goes on to say:

> The trial took place two years ago. The officer who was appointed to defend the accused, a Colonel Everett, has been gaining a considerable amount of publicity through his efforts to discredit the investigation, prosecution, and trial of these murderers.

He has been assisted in this endeavor by German lawyers retained by certain of the individual defendants who were wealthy enough or had connections in Germany influential enough, to procure and pay for their services. Their efforts in this regard culminated in the recent appeal of these convictions to the United States Supreme Court on the grounds that the trial court committed error in admitting into evidence confessions which it was claimed were improperly obtained. These confessions were the basis of most of the convictions.

I should like to say here, Mr. President, that this young man has already prepared affidavits under oath, as have many others who were concerned with the prosecution, denying any improper, unfair, or vicious tactics in securing the confessions.

I read further from the letter:

The prosecution proved that orders were given by the commanding general of the German Army, which spearheaded this last desperate offensive and transmitted and elaborated upon by subordinate commanders, to the effect that prisoners of war would not be taken and that civilians would be given no quarter. It was also shown that subordinate commanders down to the last noncom transmitted these orders with their own embellishments and propaganda in order to incite their men to carry them out ruthlessly. The prosecution also showed that these orders resulted in the mass shooting of American prisoners of war and Belgian civilians. It was proved in this connection that in addition to the hundred or more American prisoners of war who were murdered at the crossroads in Malmedy, there were over 500 other American prisoners of war and Belgian civilians who were similarly dealt with by these fanatics.

Mr. President, when I received that letter I took the matter up with the Secretary of the Army, who assured me that it would be investigated. The Judge Simpson Commission had already been appointed and was in the process of looking into the case.

Meanwhile, this application for a writ of habeas corpus had been filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, accompanied by an affidavit setting forth what this young friend of mine tells me are utterly groundless charges as to the manner in which these confessions were procured. As a result of that the Secretary of War appointed another separate group to look specifically into the Malmedy situation.

Mr. President, what I ask for on behalf of these young officers, these Americans who had done the job of investigating the Malmedy massacre, and of preparing the prosecution and conducting the trials—and all that they asked me to urge in their behalf—is an opportunity to be heard before any final decisions are made in the reduction of these sentences. So far as I know some affidavits they sent were sent to the Simpson committee. Whether that committee paid any attention to them or not I do not know. I assume it did. But I do not believe that the commission which was specifically appointed to investigate the Malmedy phase of these prosecutions ever had opportunity to examine these affidavits. If it did, that commission and no other commission has ever had the opportunity personally to hear the testimony of these young officers, who have been charged, without an opportunity on their part to defend themselves, with conducting themselves in a vicious and highly improper manner.

Yet, Mr. President, as I understand, Colonel Everett who defended the Germans, and Mr. Lear, who I understand is a German lawyer, had on opportunity personally to appear before the commission and present their side of the case.

Mr. President, these men were in the performance of their duty, they were dealing with one war crime, which is the one in which our nationals were involved, our own soldiers, our own boys in uniform, men who now lie beneath the sod in France and Belgium, and have no one to speak in their behalf.

I think this matter should be thoroughly investigated. I should like to see a real survey and study made of the whole conduct of this situation. If these Germans were not fairly treated, if they were not treated as the fair conduct of war, according to its rules, requires, they are, of course, entitled to consideration. But in determining whether they were fairly treated or not the men who had charge of investigating their conduct, the men who had charge of prosecuting them, should themselves have an opportunity to appear and be heard in person to answer the charges, which I believe to be groundless, which were made against them in behalf of these convicted German war criminals.

So, Mr. President, if I may, I should like to secure unanimous consent to offer a resolution calling for such an investigation, and have it received and referred.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to advise the Senator that a similar resolution was submitted this morning. I offered one providing as follows:

That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the administration of military justice by courts operated by the armed forces of the United States in occupied areas, with a view to ascertaining (1) whether the conduct of trials and the treatment of prisoners in cases involving civilians (both citizen and noncitizen) as well as cases involving military personnel have been in accordance with American concepts of justice, and (2) whether any legislation is necessary or desirable for the purpose of improving the operations of such courts. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

I might add that there is another side to what the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has said. The situation is that when I submitted the resolution I had a statement printed with it. I am not sure the distinguished Senator was present at the time. I presented this statement to be included with the resolution:

The purpose of this resolution is to provide for an inquiry into the type of justice which is being administered by our forces overseas. There are now more than 100,000,000 people outside the United States and its territories who are liable to some sort of prosecution trial and punishment under the American flag.

These people may be tried and are tried on charges of war crimes, crimes against humanity, and crimes against the occupation forces. All of these charges, in case of conviction, incur heavy penalties.

Yet these courts and courts' systems are not subordinate, or have not been so far subordinate to any regularly established court of the United States. The theater commander in practice has the last word.

As one might expect in a system so far removed from popular constitution and control many abuses have crept in. These abuses have been compounded by the hybrid rules of procedure. They combine American, Continental, and Russian rules. As a result their rulings are a far cry from what would be demanded by American standards.

One of the most glaring abuses now exists in Germany. At the American Military Government Court at Dachau 1,672 persons were tried as of August 12, 1948, at the time of the latest figures reported by the Department of the Army, 1,416 had been convicted. Two hundred and ninety-seven death sentences were approved. Of these, according to subsequent newspaper reports, 217 have been executed. There remain 39 defendants still under death sentences.

(The Department of the Army reports only 29 and this number has been reduced to 14 by various commutations.)

This sounds like a record of justice done to the criminal members of a criminal conspiracy. But in fact it may well turn out to be, upon investigation, one of the most deplorable miscarriage of justice in history.

The distinguished Senator mentioned the Secretary of War, Kenneth Royall. Mr. Royall appointed a 2-man civilian board a long time ago, they made a survey of the trials at the request of Secretary Royall, and returned to the United States recently and reported. What did they report? These two men appointed by the Secretary of War said that the following methods were used to force confessions: Beatings and brutal kickings; knocking out teeth and breaking jaws; mock trials; solitary confinement; torture with burning splinters; posturing as priests; very limited rations; spiritual deprivation; promises of acquittal.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LANGER. Just a moment. I do not know whether or not these statements are true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota does not have the floor. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor. He yielded to the Senator from North Dakota. This whole proceeding is out of order unless it be regarded as being conducted by unanimous consent. The Senator can yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. BALDWIN. I asked unanimous consent that I might submit the resolution, and the Senator from North Dakota is making a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota reserved the right to object to the submission of the resolution.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under his reservation, I suppose he is entitled to proceed. The Senator from Connecticut still has the floor.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LANGER. I assumed, when I reserved the right to object, that I had a right to say why.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the Senator may do so, within a reasonable limit.

Mr. LANGER. I merely wish to get the matter clearly before the Senate, because I do not think the Senator from Connecticut was present this morning when I submitted the resolution.

Mr. BALDWIN. Will the Senator yield so that I may say a word?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Charges are made against these young American officers who conducted the prosecution.

Mr. LANGER. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. I have not had an opportunity to make clear the purpose of my resolution. It is to give these men an opportunity to refute those charges, an opportunity they have never had. I submit that if they are to be charged in the public press, and in a magazine as important and as widely read as Time, with such heinous offenses, they should have opportunity to appear before the Commission in person and have their side of the matter told.

I say, Mr. President, that so far as my knowledge of this young man, who denies these things, is concerned, I know him to be a young man of the highest integrity, whose word is unimpeachable. In my humble judgment he has never had his day in court to answer these particular charges.

Mr. LANGER. The purpose of the resolution submitted today is to give such men an opportunity to answer such charges. That is the very purpose of the resolution. It is simply a duplication of the other resolution, and I thought I would call it to the attention of the senior Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to the Senator from North Dakota that I am happy to have his collaboration in this matter, because if our troops use improper methods to secure convictions, I as an American citizen should like to know what they are, because I think it is important that we demonstrate to the world that in the administration of American justice we are fair, honest, and forthright. If the charges are not true, I should like to know that also, because I think these young officers are entitled to some consideration.

Mr. LANGER. I merely wanted to say that so far as these charges are concerned Judge E. LeRoy van Roden of Media, Pa., and Justice Gordon Simpson of the Supreme Court of Texas, who composed the board, recommended to Secretary Royall, after making these shocking discoveries, that a permanent clemency program be started for most of those convicted. They further recommended that 29 of those under death sentence be spared.

I wanted to mention the matter to the Senator so he might understand the purpose of the resolution I had submitted, and possibly we can combine our efforts in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota object to the submission of the resolution?

Mr. LANGER. I do not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and properly referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 42) was received and referred to the Committee on Armed Services, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Armed Services, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation of the action of the Army with respect to the trial of those persons responsible for the massacre of American soldiers which occurred during the Battle of the Bulge near Malmedy, Belgium, in December 1944, with particular reference to (1) the conduct of the investigation by the Army preliminary to the trial, (2) the conduct of the trial of the alleged perpetrators of the massacre, and (3) the action taken by Army officials subsequent to the trial, which has resulted in the commutations of the sentences of many of the defendants convicted at the trial.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report its findings, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it may deem advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CLOTURE RULE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in connection with the question of the amendment of the rules, some time ago a columnist made the statement that the rules were going to be amended because of what took place on the last night of the last session of Congress. He quoted particularly the speeches made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] and the senior Senator from North Dakota. I want to state now that when the matter comes before the Senate again I expect to bring to the attention of the Senate just exactly what took place, so far as the senior Senator from North Dakota is concerned, upon that occasion.

Mr. President, I want to ask any Senator upon the floor if it is filibustering when a Senator rises on the floor respecting a matter so important as the drafting of our boys, after the Republican majority in the Eightieth Congress had for weeks and weeks adjourned the sessions of the Senate for a 3-day period, then for another 3-day period, then for a further 3-day period, and then still for another 3-day period, knowing all the while that the Philadelphia convention was going to take place in June.

Mr. President, 2 years before the junior Senator from California was a Member of this body I stood upon the floor of the Senate for 5 hours pleading that the draft law be not enacted. And yet when upon that occasion I asked the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] some questions, the RECORD shows that the Senator from California, then the majority leader temporarily, time after time proceeded to castigate the Senator from North Dakota and tell him what kind of questions he should ask.

I now ask the Senator from California or any other Senator whether it was filibustering when the Senator from North Dakota, or a Senator from any other State did what I did upon that occasion. I read upon the floor of the Senate letter after letter from the various churches of the State of North Dakota. I read letters from Methodist churches. Did they not have a right to protest? I read letters from Catholic churches. Did they not have a right to protest? I read letters from the Moravian church. Did its members not have a right to protest? I read letters from Baptist churches. Did they not have a right to protest? I read a letter from the Rotary Club of Devils Lake, N. Dak. Did not that club have a right to protest? I read letters from the Board of Higher Education of our State. Not one member of that board is a political friend of mine. The members of that board, representing every single institution of learning in North Dakota, unanimously adopted a resolution against the draft. I read that resolution upon the floor of the Senate. I resented then, and I resent now, the fact that the distinguished Senator from California rose on the floor of the Senate at the conclusion of my statement and said that Joe Stalin must be happy because the Senators had delayed fulfillment of action on the draft measure some few hours.

Mr. President, I am proud of the fact that I stood upon the floor of the Senate in opposition to that draft.

I read in a newspaper the other night that now a bipartisan group of Democrats and Republicans is getting a bill together which would repeal the draft. The article also said that what defeated the Republicans in the last election was the enactment of the draft.

Mr. President, when I spoke on that subject I did not speak in any political sense. Senators can go through my speech from one end to the other and they will find no political bias. There were no Bible quotations in it. I did not quote any poetry. I brought before the Senate the feelings of the various churches of the State of North Dakota, and of the Farmers Union and the various other farm organizations. That is a matter of record.

I want to say again that I resented the statements made at that time, and I continue to resent them. When the matter of change of the rules comes up in the Senate I am going to ascertain once for all whether there is going to be an attempt, by a change of the Senate rules, to keep a Senator from a small State from laying bare upon the floor of the Senate the feelings of the people of his State.

The late Senator Charles McNary said to me the very first time the question of cloture came up after I became a member, "I signed one cloture petition during the 22 years I have been here, and I never am going to sign another." He said "the only progressive legislation we have had was enacted because of the fact that Members of Congress who came from small States were able to get, perhaps not all they wanted, but were able to get a compromise. So, Mr. President, having made my position clear on that question, I wish to take up another matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I had not intended to mention this matter, but inasmuch as the Senator from North Dakota has seen fit to bring it to the attention of the Senate, I might as well get my oar in here, inasmuch as I was the other party to the filibuster which seems to have caused so much discussion in the past few days.

One can call it a filibuster if he so desires. It lasted only overnight. I believe that the rules which it is planned to adopt would allow much greater discussion than that before the debate was called a filibuster.

The other day the press stated that the Senator from Oregon had intimated that the Senator from Idaho had endangered the national security by talking against the peacetime draft. I do not know why he did not include the Senator from North Dakota, because I am sure he was not ashamed of his part in fighting against the peacetime draft. I wish to say only that I hardly feel that it is endangering the national security when a Senator rises on the floor of the Senate and makes it plain, as I did at that time, that he has confidence in the patriotism of young Americans to serve their country without compulsion. I stated that if we were to increase the financial rewards attached to service in our armed forces we could get men without drafting them. I pointed out that it was a procedure absolutely foreign to all our traditions to have a peacetime draft. If that is endangering the national security, it is a strange definition. When it said that a Senator endangers the national security, the only inference that can be drawn, of course, is that that Senator is disloyal to his country. I certainly am not.

Mr. President, is it endangering the national security for a Senator to exercise foresight and to look ahead and evaluate the facts as they really are? At the time I stated that the peacetime draft was unnecessary.

I have before me an article from the Washington Post, in an Associated Press dispatch dated January 20. The heading is Figures Indicate That Draft Law Will Be Discarded. Did the Senator from North Dakota see that article?

Mr. LANGER. I saw it.

Mr. TAYLOR. It states that the armed forces have reached the goal set by President Truman of 1,616,000 men in uniform by June of 1950. They have already enlisted 1,621,000 men, more than were called for by 1950. So the use of the peacetime draft has been discontinued.

But, Mr. President, I notice that the military authorities do not say, "Let us get back to the good old American principles of voluntary service, get rid of involuntary servitude, and repeal the draft." No; they do not need it and they are not using it, but they intend to keep it. I disapprove of such a policy. If it is being disloyal to my country to want to see us continue in the paths set by our forefathers, being freemen and acting as freemen, then I shall have to say, like Patrick Henry, if that be treason or disloyalty, make the most of it.

Inasmuch as the peacetime draft is not being used, and apparently not needed, according to the admission of the military authorities, I have today introduced a bill to repeal the peacetime draft. Did I correctly understand the Senator from North Dakota to say that a bipartisan group of Senators was introducing such a measure?

Mr. LANGER. The other day the newspapers stated that a bipartisan group was introducing a bill to repeal the draft.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad to see that the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Idaho now have allies who have come to realize that this is still a free country and should be kept that way.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator from Idaho imply that the Army has changed the rules, and that it now makes a man enlist for 3 years instead of 2?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; I read today, I believe. They are making the men enlist for 3 years instead of 2. It seems that perhaps they want to revive the peacetime draft.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to say to the able Senator from North Dakota, who mentioned the fact that 2 or 3 years prior to my coming to the Senate he was also opposed to the draft, that that was during the time I was serving in the Army of the United States as an enlisted man and officer.

I invite the attention of the able Senator from North Dakota to the fact that if prior to the outbreak of World War II some of our colleagues had put the defenses of the country in proper order, there might be many young Americans living today who are now buried on the islands of the Pacific and in the cemeteries of Europe, and whose bodies are just now being returned home.

This gives me an opportunity to say to the able Senator from North Dakota that only the other day I wrote to the Department of the Air Force and asked the Department to supply me with a list of the names of young American soldiers who have died in supplying the air lift into Berlin, where a very cold war, which sometimes blows very hot, is even now going on. I want to say to the able Senator from North Dakota that I do not believe there is a man in this body who desires to have peace more than does the junior Senator from California. I do not believe that there is a person in the country who desires to have peace more than do the men who served in the armed services of the United States during the late war or during the First World War. But I do believe that the best way of preserving the peace of this country and the peace of the world is to keep America strong in the air, on the land, and on the sea, because in this age of the airplane and the atom, in which we now live, when there is a power loose in the world which recognizes nothing but force, we are not serving the cause of world peace and we are not serving the cause of the security of the Government of the United States and the free institutions which we have all taken an oath to uphold, by making America weak.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter from the Secretary of the Air Force giving a list of 26 American citizens, officers of the United States Air Force, who have given their lives in order to uphold world peace and international obligations.

There being no objection, the letter and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, January 18, 1949.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: Reference is made to a telephone conversation between Mr. Wilson of your office and a member of my staff, in which Mr. Wilson requested the names and addresses of personnel killed while performing duties on Operation Vittles.

Inclosed are the names and addresses of 26 personnel killed in Operation Vittles. This report is complete as of January 17, 1949.

If this directorate can be of any further assistance to you please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM T. SMITH,
Colonel, United States Air Force; Executive, Directorate of Legislation and Liaison.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in response to what the distinguished Senator from California has said, I simply appeal to the RECORD. The Senator from North Dakota is proud that he offered his life to defend this country; and it comes with ill grace from any Senator—from California or any other State—to impugn the motives of the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from North Dakota, and, after we had stood on this floor and protested against a peacetime draft, which we had a perfect right to do, to say that Joe Stalin must be happy. I want the distinguished Senator from California and every other Senator to know that I yield to no man in patriotism. I voted for the 70-group air force. I am proud of the record I have made in voting to make this Government strong.

That is entirely beside the point. The point is that the distinguished Senator from California took it upon himself to impugn the motives of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Dakota. I want to tell my distinguished friend that the people of North Dakota are just as patriotic as are the people of the State of California. The majority were opposed then, and they are now opposed, to a peacetime draft. It is the tradition of America not to have a peacetime draft. We had none until a short time ago. Certainly a man is not disloyal, and is not helping Stalin, when he rises upon the floor of the Senate and does his duty in bringing to the attention of the Senate the feelings of the people of his State, and when he quotes church after church, Rotary Clubs, the Farmers Union, and boards of higher education, and does not consume a single minute of time in talking about something else, and does not do anything which even savors of a filibuster.

That is what I wanted to make plain here today, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there are a number of nominations on the Executive Calendar. I do not think there is any objection to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). If there are no reports of committees at this time, the Clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert J. Loveland, of Iowa, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Marvel, to be United States attorney for the district of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gilmore S. Haynie, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Miles N. Pike, to be United States attorney for the district of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas N. Curran, to be United States marshal for the district of Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Paul B. Messick, to be United States Marshal for the district of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jack R. Caufield, to be United States marshal for the district of Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of all confirmations made today.

PETER MARSHALL

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the news of the sudden and untimely death of the Reverend Dr. Peter Marshall, Chaplain of the Senate, comes as a shock to all of the Members of the Senate, whose wholehearted affection and admiration he enjoyed.

In his capacity as Chaplain of the Senate, he exercised a spiritual influence and moral guidance felt by every Member here. While he had no voice in determining policy and had no vote on any measure that came before us, his prayers carried weight in our hearts and many times moved us in the right direction.

He was a man of great piety and great wit, a man with strength of soul and fine personal charm, whose memory will be bright in the recollections of every Senator for many years to come.

His beautiful and eloquent prayers for the Senate were often remarked upon by members of the press, and often noted by our friends and visitors here. He put the whole power of his spirit into his beseechings of Almighty God, and he carried all of us with him.

In his youth, in Scotland, he worked with his hands in the steel mills. Later he felt the call of a religious vocation, and entered the Presbyterian ministry. He came to our country as a young man, and became a citizen of our Nation to work among us as a man of God.

We honor him today as he goes to the final judgment of his Maker, to give an account of his life upon this earth as a great human being, a great minister, a great American. He takes his place in the long line of distinguished Chaplains who have served the Senate.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 43) was read, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and regret of the death of Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., late the Chaplain of the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like to say just a few words in regard to the resolution offered by the majority leader.

The minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], is unfortunately not able to be present here today to express his personal feelings and the feelings all of us share at the loss of our Chaplain. Peter Marshall was Senator WHERRY'S pastor. He officiated at the marriage of his daughter. I know he feels a great personal loss. So do we all.

Our Chaplain, Dr. Marshall, always opened our sessions with prayers that helped and inspired us all. They combined brevity with common sense. They always aptly expressed in religious terms the problems of the moment. Above all, they were inspired with deep spiritual feeling. I recall his words about the meaning of liberty:

Teach us that liberty is not only to be loved but also to be lived. Liberty is too precious a thing to be buried in books. It costs too much to be hoarded. Make us to see that liberty is not the right to do as we please, but the opportunity to please to do what is right.

Never shall we forget the morsels of thought that were contained in his prayers. They were replete with earthy phrases—phrases which caught the attention and made meaningful his spiritual message.

Most of us came to know our Chaplain only two short years ago. We immediately felt the impact of his prayers, so we wanted to know him better. I always found him full of humor, a man of ready repartee, and intensely human. Why shouldn't he be? He was a man who knew how to toil with his hands. He knew what it was to work hard for an education, and he had what we need so much in the world today—the inspiration to be a spiritual leader. So, with hard work and much sacrifice, he became one. We have been the beneficiaries of his toil and his inspiration. All of us will miss his daily words of guidance to us. Most of us on the day on which President Truman was inaugurated heard Dr. Marshall's prayer. It will remain in our minds as typifying the spirit of the man who said these words:

Give to them good health for the physical strains of their office, good judgment for the decisions they must make, wisdom beyond their own, and clear understanding for the problems of this difficult hour.

We thank Thee for their humble reliance upon Thee. May they go often to the throne of grace, as we commend them both to Thy loving care and Thy guiding hand. Amen.

These words and the memory of the man who said them will remain long with us.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, at a time like this words are of little consequence. Peter Marshall has made his record and it is indeed a brilliant one. A man above politics, he bowed to the needs and desires of this body. Would that God give all of us here in the Senate the strength and courage to live up to his simple, provocative yet easily understood prayers.

Peter Marshall was not born in this great land of ours. He was a native of Scotland, a nation that has sent many of her sons to our shores, who have made a real contribution to our democratic way of life. Peter Marshall was indeed among that illustrious group.

His early life was not an easy one. Working with his fellow man in the everyday world before becoming a minister of the gospel, he pursued the same hard road that many others have taken. Yet he remained the same unaffected man he had always been. Upon attaining what many of us would call a highly successful status, but with which he would disagree, Peter Marshall did not forget those he might have met along the way. As a Scotsman, his creed might well be expressed in a verse from Robert Burns, of whom Peter Marshall was an ardent admirer:

Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that,
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth,
Shall bear the gree[1] and a' that;
For a' that and a' that,
It's comin' yet for a' that,
That man to man, the world o'er
Shall brithers be for a' that.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Republican minority conference today. This resolution was submitted to the conference by me on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has taken from the United States Senate its beloved Chaplain, the Reverend Peter Marshall; and

Whereas he has rendered to the membership of the United States Senate through his daily prayers a spiritual service of great and lasting value; and

Whereas he was our affectionate friend, ever ready to give of himself, of his efforts, and of his judgment for our guidance in the ways of righteousness and Christian living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Republican Members of the United States Senate, express our sense of loss at his passing; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to Mrs. Catherine Marshall, that she may be assured of our deep sympathy and condolences upon the passing of our friend, her husband.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials, one from the Washington Post of January 26, 1949, and the other from the Washington Evening Star of January 26, 1949, paying deserved tribute to the late Chaplain of the Senate, Dr. Peter Marshall.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of January 26, 1949]

PETER MARSHALL

We deplore, as the Capital must, the untimely death of Dr. Peter Marshall, the 46-year-old Chaplain of the Senate who was also pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. Till Dr. Marshall came to the Senate 2 years ago, the Senators had heard a more or less perfunctory sort of "grace" before they began their deliberations. The Presbyterian minister opened the ears of the bowed Senators to his words of prayer, and he put those words alongside their subsequent speeches. They were novel out of the mouth of a minister, pointed in their application to the business in hand, and charged with a hortatory spirit that carried conviction. His voice had a vibrancy, his words a Scot's tang, his presence a manliness, that enabled his allocution to linger in the senatorial memory. Only recently an American citizen, having been born in Scotland, he had a passion for America. His zest for life was as fresh and as real as his religion. He inspired the younger generation with sermons that, while without profundity, brought a living God into their lives. His is a loss that the Senate will not easily repair and that his growing congregation can ill spare.

[1] Have the prize.

[From the Washington Evening Star of January 26, 1949]

DR. PETER MARSHALL

Living and working in Washington only eleven years, the Reverend Dr. Peter Marshall nevertheless has left his mark upon the whole city. He was a man of a contagious spirit, eager and alert, quick to see opportunities of service and to meet their challenge. Within a few months after coming here he had made himself an influence throughout the entire community. Wherever he went, whatever he did, the result of his presence was constructive. In classic language, he was a builder of the Kingdom of God on this earth.

Perhaps one explanation of Dr. Marshall's power might be found in the fact that he was a son of the people and kept his touch with them even when he had risen to high station. Born and reared against a bleak and uncongenial background, he earned his bread as a laborer in his youth. His formal education was limited to a mechanical and mining college at Coatbridge in Scotland and the Columbia Seminary at Decatur in Georgia. Most of his scholarly achievement he owed to his own inquiring mind. The magic of his eloquence was a native gift which he shared with Burns and Carlyle, Hugh Miller, and John Buchan. But he was a great preacher because of an inner genius, a force of faith which demanded expression in human ministry.

His decade at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church was a period of progress which soon will find fulfillment in a new religious center on the site long ago hallowed by the presence of Abraham Lincoln. Dr. Marshall will not see the building program finished, but his association with its start will be an asset always. He is certain of remembrance, too, at the Capitol. Able interpreters of the Word preceded him in the chaplaincy of the Senate, and he contributed notably to the tradition which they established. His final prayer for government "above party and personality, beyond time and circumstance, for the good of America and the peace of the world" was a masterful utterance which well may be regarded as his testament to the country he adopted and dearly loved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

CATHERINE MARSHALL

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit, out of order, Senate Resolution 44, for reference to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 44) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Catherine Marshall, widow of Rev. Peter Marshall, late the Chaplain of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Dr. Marshall, Chaplain of the Senate, I move that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 31, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Russell W. Lambert, minister, First Methodist Church, De Kalb, Ill., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, whose spirit moves within the humankind of all nations, and whose goodness has been ever availed to us, we pause for a moment at the beginning of these deliberations to give Thee our minds and hearts.

Cleanse them, renew them, shape them to Thy will. Guide them in high purpose and toward noble achievement, that these minds and hearts may serve our Nation and our world in new pathways of service that lead from a worthy past into a still greater future. Aware of the burden of responsibilities and acknowledging the manifold needs of the hour, we are conscious of our loyalties to Thee and our Nation, and we are filled with the hopes and dreams that stem from a precious heritage. The future of our country and the world rests with these minds and hearts, so fill them with Thy wisdom and love that Thy holy presence may breathe through us and Thy will may be known unto our land and unto all the world. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 25, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. TYDINGS a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, vice Mr. BRICKER.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. DOUGLAS a member of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, vice Mr. Ball, whose term as Senator expired.

REQUEST TO SUSPEND RULES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to recognize today a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what for?

Mr. McCORMACK. The bill intended to be brought up under suspension is a joint resolution from the Committee on Appropriations making an additional appropriation, as I understand, of $500,000 for disaster relief. There is a very emergent situation throughout the West and Middle West, that terrific storm disaster.

I make this statement as majority leader that if unanimous consent is granted this is the only bill that will be brought up under suspension.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will make the same statement.

Mr. TABER. And it is very desirable that it be done immediately.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the information I have received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CERTAIN PERSONNEL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 62) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That effective February 1, 1949, there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the basic rate of $4,500 per annum for the services of an assistant cashier who shall be designated by the Sergeant at Arms of the House subject to the approval of the Speaker.

SEC. 2. That effective January 4, 1949, the compensation of the Deputy Sergeant at Arms in Charge of Pairs, Office of the Sergeant at Arms, and the compensation of the special employee, Office of the Doorkeeper, shall be at the basic rate of $4,000 per annum, respectively.

SEC. 3. That effective February 1, 1949, the compensation of John Andrews and William F. Russell, designated by House Resolution 39, adopted January 10, 1949, as minority employees, shall be at the basic rate of $7,000 per annum, respectively.

SEC. 4. There shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the basic rate of $5,000 per annum for the services of an assistant Journal clerk; compensation at the basic rate of $5,000 per annum for the services of an assistant tally clerk; compensation at the basic rate of $3,900 per annum for the services of an assistant enrolling clerk; compensation at the basic rate of $3,000 per annum for the services of an assistant bill clerk; all of whom shall be designated by the minority leader subject to the approval of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD explaining the purpose of the resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it has long been recognized by the leadership of the House that it was desirous to have a corps of trained personnel to function in the various key positions under the service of the House. In order to accomplish that, the resolution creates four assistant clerkships which shall be taken out of patronage and filled by competent men who have proved their worth.

It has been recognized by all of the older members that the load-work of the House long ago justified additional clerical assistance in the various departments that this resolution contemplates.

If this resolution is not adopted at this time the men who held the jobs as head of these various departments will leave the service of the House and their experience and efficiency will be lost. It is desirable that they not only assist in training the top men of the various departments who will shortly be appointed but will aid appreciably in ameliorating the work of these departments.

It was contemplated in the Legislative Reorganization Act that career employees should be provided for in the staffing of committees but nothing tangible was done concerning the employees of the House directly. This resolution will take care of that need by providing a career service for the employees who have proved their worth.

In the unhappy event that the present majority of the House should become the minority in the Eighty-second Congress then the top men in the departments in this Congress would be designated by the next minority leader to fill the clerkships that this resolution provides, so that in the future there will always be majority and minority employees who are experienced and trustworthy.

FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN ARTICLES IMPORTED TO PROMOTE INTERNATIONAL GOOD WILL

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 88.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution of June 25, 1948 (Public Law 769, 80th Cong.), entitled "Joint resolution permitting the free entry of certain articles imported to promote international good will, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out "December 31, 1948" and by inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1949."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman to explain what this resolution means?

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution merely provides that we extend the date to June 30, 1949. There will be an amendment offered to the resolution changing the date from March 31 to June 30.

On June 19 last year there was adopted by the House and by the Senate, and also signed by the President, a bill to provide for a Thank-You Train coming from France—a train of 48 boxcars containing merchandise which France was sending to this country as a gesture of appreciation for the Friendship Train we sent over there. This train was supposed to arrive in the United States last October. It is now loaded aboard the ship Magellan and is due to arrive in this country sometime next week. Unless we pass this bill, it will be necessary for the Government of France or for us to pay an import duty on these articles. The 48 or 49 cars, of the old 40-and-8 type that World War I veterans knew so well, will be left here, one in each State, as souvenirs. The merchandise donated by the people of France will be sold at public auction, the proceeds from which will go to charity.

For this reason, the administration is heartily in favor of the pending bill, and I sincerely hope we can pass it today.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Is it not a fact that this resolution was passed unanimously out of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FORAND. It was passed unanimously yesterday by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "March 31, 1949" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISASTER RELIEF

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution (H. J. Res. 112) making an additional appropriation for disaster relief, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sum:

FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

Disaster relief: An additional amount for disaster relief, $500,000, subject to the limitations and restrictions under this head in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1948.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, there is very little I can tell you about this item that you do not already know. The papers have been full of reports concerning the situation surrounding the cattle and sheep in storm stricken areas in about 10 of our western areas.

Realizing the urgency of the situation and on urging by many Members of the Congress the committee held a hearing yesterday afternoon to determine the need for financial aid. As a result the committee is recommending in the accompanying resolution an amount of $500,000 for the President's disaster relief fund. This amount is in addition to $500,000 appropriated for use of the President in case of emergencies and catastrophes in the current year.

According to information furnished the committee by the Department of the Interior it is estimated that there are around 3,000,000 head of sheep and 1,000,000 head of cattle snow-bound on public grazing lands and in jeopardy of starvation. Uncounted thousands of sheep and cattle are similarly snowbound on private lands. The President has already allocated the sum of $300,000 to alleviate the suffering, both human and animal.

The principal use to which these funds will be put is the opening of primary and secondary roads as well as for the creating of trails in order that food and water may be conveyed to the starving animals.

This catastrophe, as you might well realize, not only jeopardizes our food supply for the next 4 or 5 years, but threatens the entire economy of that portion of our country whose principal industry is cattle and sheep raising.

Adequate safeguards are provided for the expenditure of this money in that before any commitments are made by the Federal Government it is to see that reasonable expenditures are to be made by the governments of each State involved and the local governments therein as well as other agencies.

I cannot see reason for much debate on this matter, and I hope this resolution is adopted.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations had presented to it yesterday the distress out in the range States in the far West resulting from the terrific snowfall. The roads are blocked, especially the back roads, and it has been impossible to get feed to the cattle on the back roads. It is also impossible for many of the people living in the small settlements to get out to get medical attention or anything else.

The President previously allocated $100,000 out of the disaster fund to help the situation. Yesterday he allocated $200,000 more, and placed General Fleming, the head of the Federal Works Agency, in charge of the operation as coordinator.

The Army has available a large number of trucks and bulldozers and various pieces of equipment that can be used for the purpose of opening the roads. It is not proposed that the farmers be supplied with feed for their animals, for they are expected to do that themselves, but it has been impossible for the local authorities with the equipment they have had available to open the roads and maintain traffic so that the farmers could get in to take care of their cattle and their feed.

Including what is presently in the disaster fund, which the President can use if it is necessary, this will make available a total of $750,000. I hope it will help in meeting that situation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand, this fund is to be added to the President's fund to be allocated to disaster areas when conditions requiring its use arise. Will this fund, with the amount here appropriated additionally to the President's fund, go entirely to the area in the West that is suffering from this terrific catastrophe?

Mr. TABER. I have no idea. I would expect the President to use it for that purpose insofar as it is desirable or necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. I am highly sympathetic with the situation in the West, but we had a terrific tornado at Warren, Ark., in which 56 people were killed and 175 were injured and millions and milions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed. I wonder if this fund would be available for any additional relief that might be necessary in connection with that disaster.

Mr. TABER. I would assume that whatever the President thought should be done with the fund could be done. It is not earmarked in any way. It is an open proposition for the President to deal with, and I would expect that he would handle it in such a way as to meet the situations that are pressing the hardest.

Mr. HARRIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This is simply a supplemental appropriation, subject to the terms and conditions of the prior appropriation for the President's disaster fund?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent that all Members who are interested in this subject may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who so desire may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the subject under consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTEN. Mr. Speaker, along with the other States in the Rocky Mountain area, northern Arizona is receiving a large share of the suffering and hardship caused by the unprecedented snowfall of the past 2 weeks. I have just received word that in some sections of my State 100 inches of snow has fallen. I believe this is an all-time record, and it is easy to picture the paralysis that has resulted.

The Arizona National Guard is attempting to feed some of the cattle stranded in deep drifts near Williams, and other local efforts are being made. However, the fact that the blizzards are continuing makes it imperative that outside help be forthcoming soon if valuable livestock is to be saved.

I have also received word that the heavy weather is causing a great deal of suffering among the Indians who dwell on the plateau areas in northern Arizona. These unfortunate people are not prepared for this sort of weather, and many are in need of help today.

While we in Arizona welcome the snowfall and resultant run-off that will fill our reservoirs, we also realize that unless we receive some assistance the losses in livestock will more than offset those gains. Therefore, we urgently request that our State be included in the $500,000 joint resolution for relief of disaster areas.

THIS IS THE WAY TO ACT QUICKLY

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, on January 2 the snowstorm sweeping the West whirled into western South Dakota. It was accompanied by a wind of hurricane velocity, and continued for 4 days. Snowfalls ranged from 1 to 3 feet. Drifts of 20, 25, and 30 feet were created. All highways were blocked. Side roads were drifted full. All transportation came to a stop. Indeed, many people were unable to stir from their homes. Livestock on the open range drifted with the storm until fences stopped them or until they tumbled over snow-filled banks and gullies and were buried.

During the month there have been four succeeding storms of varying intensity, but each one more or less undoing the work of clearing roads that was accomplished between. The Milwaukee Railroad from Mitchell to Rapid City got in yesterday 26 days late. The first Northwestern got in only 13 days late, but after a 2-day run was snowed in again. Yesterday six locomotives were reported fighting to reopen a distance of 58 miles.

The State of South Dakota has spent over $425,000 in extra snow-removal efforts and has appropriated another $100,000. Counties are doing all that time and weather permit, regardless of their finances. One county, I learned today, is spending a thousand dollars a day. That is a county of only 6,000 people. Ten counties are severely hit in my district, 20 are badly affected. It is estimated that close to $750,000 has been spent locally in combating the storm.

Now, some people mistakenly have the idea that all of the Dakotas are a land of ice and snow in winter. That is not normally true in western South Dakota.

The average snowfall in these 10 counties is from 3½ to 4 inches for January, over a period of 40-year records. But in this January they have had from 25 to 60 inches of sharp, wind-driven snow.

Cattle have been isolated and stranded from feed. Homes have been isolated. Food and fuel are running short. One report yesterday was that over 400 families in an area 100 miles by 150 miles have not been heard from since January 2. What stories of suffering will eventually be told we can only guess at this time.

Yes, planes have been at work, carrying both food and medical supplies whenever they could fly. State and county highway crews have been working night and day. The time has come when more equipment must be brought in and thrown into the battle to reduce suffering, save lives, and to the extent possible, save some of the foundation herds of livestock in this a high-producing area for cattle and sheep.

The situation in South Dakota is not worse than elsewhere. The situation is catastrophic in at least seven States. Representatives from these range States were given a very generous hearing by the Appropriations Subcommittee, yesterday. This morning the full committee adopted the resolution now before the House.

No one pretends to say that this amount of money will do the job, but it will start the operation of extra bulldozers, weasels, and cats or half-tracks which can be secured from the Army or from private contractors. And it will keep the President's disaster relief fund solvent so that further allocations may be made as the battle goes on.

If more funds should be needed, as I believe they will, they can be added. But this resolution is the way for prompt, immediate action. I feel sure it will have the approval of the House today.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, we have no quarrel with the Committee on Appropriations who have made this recommendation and have made these funds available for the President's emergency fund. The only complaint we have perhaps is that it is too little and very late and perhaps a little too late. I hope that the Members of the House are not going to be led to believe that this is a bill to make these funds available to feed anybody's livestock. That is not the case at all. This is simply to furnish sufficient funds to open roads and trails not only to the livestock but to isolated communities that have been isolated since the 1st day of January. The situation is still very urgent.

I, for one, shall certainly ask the President of the United States as time goes on to add to these funds if this emergency continues. We are certainly grateful to the committee for the speedy action they have taken. We hope that this money will be spent in the proper places.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course I am in favor of this resolution because this is a disaster which the people involved could not prevent. I also agree with the gentleman from Arkansas that funds ought to be provided to take care of situations where a flood, cyclone, or tornado destroys homes and public buildings and where the people are unable to take care of themselves.

Mr. GRANGER. You will never have any trouble on that score so far as I am concerned, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I am in sympathy with this resolution. I wonder if the gentleman will enlighten the House as to what action the States are taking in trying to alleviate conditions so far as feeding starving livestock and opening of roads is concerned.

Mr. GRANGER. May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that is a proper question. In nearly every instance in every one of these States emergencies have been declared by the various governors. Ten dollars has been appropriated and spent by the States to every one that is appropriated here. Much money has been spent in the counties and by the local organizations in those States.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. In response to the question raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would like to state that while only about half of the State of Nebraska is involved in the most serious way, the Governor informs us that the local and State groups are stretching themselves to the breaking point. I believe it was the day before yesterday that the Nebraska Legislature provided $500,000 additional for this purpose.

Mr. GRANGER. I heard that testimony yesterday and I believe that that is the fact.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I want to express my appreciation to the committee and the leadership for acting so expeditiously on this bill. I am constrained to say, however, that, in my judgment, the sum of $500,000 is wholly inadequate to bring any substantial measure of relief to the stricken area. The storms visited upon the West since the turn of the year, in my opinion, constitute a national disaster. Substantial parts of seven States have been fighting blizzard conditions of unprecedented severity, day in and day out, for nearly 4 weeks. Never in the history of the West have there been storms with 40 to 60 inches of snow, with subzero weather, for 26 straight days, sometimes ranging more than 30 degrees below zero, with blinding winds up to 70 miles an hour. The snow was so fine that roads were repeatedly opened one day and filled in the next. It was common to see drifts 20 and 30 feet high everywhere in the area. In the first 3 days of the storm, over 21 lives were lost in the intermountain area. It is impossible to estimate the livestock loss as it has been increasing daily. Many small farmers and ranchers have lost their entire herds. The sheep and cattle have lost weight each day and the exact extent of the losses cannot be determined for several weeks. The Denver Post of last Monday carried a headline at the top of its first page as follows: "Empire sheep industry faces total loss." It quoted Sylvan J. Pauly, of Deer Lodge, Mont., president of the National Wool Growers Association, to the effect that—

> The record-breaking series of January storms in the Rocky Mountain empire threatened the industry with annihilation.

About 10 days ago, a survey was made to determine the stock loss in Wyoming, and, Mr. Speaker, I desire to quote from an article in the Wyoming Eagle of a week ago:

> NINE MILLION DOLLARS STOCK LOSSES ESTIMATED
> The combined figures of two livestock experts indicated last night that Wyoming stockmen lost some $9,000,000 in dead animals in the big January blizzard.
>
> Federal-State statistician George Knutson and Russell Thorp, secretary of the Wyoming Stock Growers Association, released estimates which fixed stock losses in the storm at approximately 55,200 head of cattle and 105,000 head of sheep.
>
> Knutson said that cattle losses, based on $125 a head, would total about $6,900,000, and sheep, figured on $20 per head, would come to a loss of $2,100,000.
>
> Cattle losses were estimated on a 12-percent loss out of some 460,000 head believed to have been in the storm area, and on a 15-percent loss out of 760,000 head of sheep.
>
> Both men stressed that only rough estimates were possible at this time, since many more cattle and sheep may be dead or dying in the storm's aftermath.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Instead of calling it a storm, it is what you might call an unprecedented disaster?

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I thank the gentleman. Never in the history of the West have storms of this severity and intensity lasted so long. The people of that area are wholly unable to cope with the situation. I may say the weather man has predicted another storm for this week end.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. While we have not had storms of such severity in Minnesota, it is true that this affects the whole United States in that if we can save some of this livestock it means that much in dollars and cents to the consumers next year. Is that not true?

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. That is quite true. In the storm area there are at least a million head of cattle and 3,000,000 head of sheep. Thousands of cattle were frozen standing on their feet. Many cases were reported of cattle losing their hoofs. Hundreds of ranchers have reported that their herds were stranded upward of 50 miles from the highways and railroads and, because of a lack of feed, the livestock was slowly starving to death. For areas of several hundred miles, the grass, and even the sagebrush, was covered completely with snow. In most cases it was impossible to get the livestock to the feed or the feed to the livestock. In days when it did not snow, the wind caused ground blizzards throughout the area. Practically every State, county, and town has appropriated money to fight the storms. The Wyoming Legislature appropriated $200,000, which was matched by the counties on a 60–40 basis. In addition, towns and private individuals spent unlimited sums in endeavoring to keep roads and trails open. The Bureau of Land Management did an excellent job in furnishing snow-fighting equipment of all kinds and character and supplied personnel to assist the States and counties. The Forest Service, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Park Service, and other agencies of the Government have assisted materially in their efforts to open roads to isolated ranchers over the whole area. The Air Force, through the operation Hay Lift, furnished hay to cover extreme emergencies. Much has been done, but much more remains to be done if we are to save the thousands of farmers and ranchers from being completely wiped out. The herds of cattle and sheep in this area are the foundation of breeding stock which furnishes the feeder cattle and sheep for the Corn Belt year in and year out. If the herds are wiped out in this storm, the Nation will suffer a continuing loss of meat supply for years to come. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD at this point a copy of a wire received from the Governor of our State on Monday last:

> CHEYENNE, WYO., January 24, 1949.
> Representative FRANK A. BARRETT,
> Washington, D. C.:
> Urgently request your interest in securing release of all available Federal equipment for use in opening roads in our storm areas to permit movement of feed to livestock and livestock to accessible feed supplies, and to open and maintain essential rural mail routes. Many such routes have been blocked for more than 3 weeks. Our need for emergency use of snow-removal equipment is beyond our own resources. This emergency need is critical to the economic stability of many western areas. The exhaustion point of man and beast is rapidly being reached because of snowbound vital avenues of transportation.

A. G. CRANE,
Governor of Wyoming.

As I said in the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I think the committee should be congratulated in bringing this bill in, but I am compelled to state that, in my judgment, the funds provided are wholly inadequate to carry on the fight.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, what has been said by previous speakers regarding this disaster is also true in half of my State of Nebraska. I have been in constant communication with the Governor, who tells me there is 60 inches of snow on the ground; that he has asked the legislature to appropriate $500,000 to help in this disaster. He is pleading with us to pass some legislation immediately in order to bring relief.

The mayors of many towns have telephoned to me telling me that farm families have been isolated in many cases for 19 consecutive days. They cannot be reached because the roads are blocked by the heavy snowfall, drifts from a half mile to a mile long, 8 to 15 feet deep. Livestock has perished and human life is endangered. The doctors cannot reach these homes because the equipment which these towns have is not sufficient or heavy enough to break through these long snowdrifts. They are asking us for some jeep weasels in order to get over the top of these snowbanks, in order to bring medicine and succor to these suffering families.

One suggestion has been made that perhaps the Army could transfer some of our experienced troops from Alaska, who are experienced in this kind of weather, to come into Nebraska and these other stricken States and bring relief to these suffering human beings. It would be great psychology.

Mr. Speaker, with other members of the Nebraska delegation, I have introduced two bills. I favor this resolution and this appropriation, which is certainly not sufficient to take care of this gigantic problem. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert these two bills in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]?

There was no objection.

The bills referred to are as follows:

A bill making appropriations for disaster relief in case of snowstorms, blizzards, and other catastrophes

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sum is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and to remain available until expended, to enable the President, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, and in such manner as he shall determine, to supplement the efforts and available resources of State and local governments or other agencies, whenever he finds any snowstorm, blizzard, flood, or other catastrophe in any part of the United States is of sufficient severity and magnitude to warrant emergency assistance by the Federal Government in alleviating hardship, or suffering caused thereby, and if the governor of any State in which such catastrophe shall occur shall certify that such assistance is required $3,000,000 to remain available until June 30, 1949, and to be expended without regard to such provisions regulating the expenditure of Government funds or the employment of persons in the Government service as he shall specify: Provided, That no expenditure shall be made with respect to any such catastrophe in any State until the governor of such State shall have entered into an agreement with such agency of the Government as the President may designate giving assurance of expenditure of a reasonable amount of the funds of the government of such State, local governments therein, or other agencies, for the same or similar purposes with respect to such catastrophe: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for departmental personal services: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent construction: Provided further, That within any affected area Federal agencies are authorized to participate in any such emergency assistance.

A bill making appropriations for emergency flood relief

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated the additional sum of $10,000,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and to remain available until expended, for flood control general (for emergency fund), for flood fighting and for the repair, restoration, and strengthening of flood control structures threatened or destroyed by floods pursuant to section 208 of Public Law 858, Eightieth Congress, second session.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARING].

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, the state of emergency which has hit us in the Western States, especially in my own State of Nevada, and particularly in the eastern and central sections of the State, calls for an immediate emergency measure. This section of the country has seen the worst storm condition that it has had in years, and the livestock, sheep and cattle, are all in imminent danger. In this desperate situation which has arisen in the Western States, my own State of Nevada is one of the worst stricken. In many places the snow is measuring from 40 to 60 inches in depth. Continuous series of high winds and blizzards are drifting the snow to as high as 20 feet. This is causing intense human suffering and loss of life, as well as a grave loss to property and livestock. One hundred thousand sheep are involved in this desperate situation, 35,000 of which are in critical condition. These sheep will have to be shipped out or they will die. They will need feed and forage. Stockmen anticipate a 50-percent loss unless feed is forthcoming at once.

Mr. Speaker, in order to get the true picture, let me emphasize that the stricken cattle are range cattle—breeding cattle—and in many sections of Nevada there is not a fence within a hundred miles, so they cannot be herded into a corral or barn to be fed. These cattle range on public lands. Unless roads can be broken through, and feed taken to the livestock, they will perish, for there is no way that they can be sheltered. As I have already stated, this is the deepest snow on record in more than half a century, and even the large crawler-type tractors are unable to cope with the drifting snows. Some feed has been flown in by the "operation haylift" method. Equipment has not been able to reach the outlying stretches of county roads. Standard snow equipment cannot take care of the situation. Heavy tractors and trucks are needed to break through the roads so that feed convoys can reach the sheep and cattle herds.

The sheep can do without water longer than the cattle but owing to the fact that subzero temperatures have caused all of the water holes to be frozen over, all of the livestock are imperiled. The consistency of the snow is of a powdered variety and offers very little water content, so the fate of the sheep is extremely desperate.

Railroad rates should be made on feed and livestock to and from the stricken areas. Because of the fact that many areas are still isolated, we have not yet heard the true picture in actual figures.

All of the assistance that you can give us in obtaining relief in order to save our livestock will be greatly appreciated. Gentlemen, I urge that the emergency be taken care of today, for another 4 days will be too late.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only that this storm is probably the peer of all storms that has ever occurred in the Rocky Mountains and Plains State region. Only this morning we hear again that a bigger and more terrific blizzard is heading for the same area.

It is almost impossible to keep the roads open. When snow plows clear the highways, new winds have been arising to fill in the snow once again. It melts, then freezes and becomes almost solid ice and the next time it storms there are these terrible walls of ice on each side of the highway, making it necessary to take men with shovels to re-clear the highway. A most difficult task.

We are not asking for feed. I support this resolution and I hope the House passes it unanimously, because it deals with one of the most terrific disasters that has ever touched the northwestern part of these United States.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

STRIKES AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, we have a law which says that management and labor must above all recognize under law that neither party has any right in its relations with any other to engage in acts or practices which jeopardize the public health, safety, or interest. The law then defines and punishes practices on the part of labor and management which affect commerce and are inimical to the general welfare. These quotations are the voice of the Taft-Hartley law. Elsewhere, and to the same end, I hear another voice:

> Employers and workers must not rage against one another in struggle over pay and wage scales, damaging the economic existence of both, but must solve these problems jointly in a higher instance, which must above all constantly envision the welfare of the people as a whole and of the state.

This latter quotation is the voice of Hitler from the pages of Mein Kampf. These voices are alike and both blare forth the song of totalitarianism. This Congress should promptly repeal this law and reinstate our good American system.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tomorrow to file a report on the bill (H. R. 1660) to continue through September 30, 1949, certain authority conferred on the President by section 2 of Public Law 395, Eighteth Congress, regarding voluntary agreements and plans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. COFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on Monday next, following the regular business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered for that date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three separate instances and to include letters and resolutions.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a very interesting article which appeared in the Boston Herald of January 19.

Mr. MICHENER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. JONAS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the change in House rules and to include a letter from a former Member of the House, Mr. John O'Connor, on the same subject.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio message.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two articles from the Washington Post and a letter that he has written to the President of the United States.

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. COLMER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

BLUE STAR MOTHERS OF AMERICA

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to provide for the incorporation of the organization known as the Blue Star Mothers of America.

The objectives of this organization as set forth in its constitution are patriotic, educational, social, and for service; true allegiance to the Government of the United States; assistance to veterans and especially to those mothers who gave their sons or daughters in the service of our country; fostering of true democracy; alertness against un-American activities; upholding freedom, justice, and equal rights; and the defense of the United States from all enemies.

Those eligible for membership in the organization are mothers, adopted mothers, or stepmothers living in the United States of a son or daughter serving in our armed forces, or who have sons or daughters honorably discharged from our armed forces during the emergency of World War II.

Few of our people have displayed such heroism, have made such sacrifices, and have given so much of themselves in worry and heartache as the mothers eligible for membership in this organization. Here is a truly patriotic group, a potential as well as an active force with capacity to bind our people together by fostering those things that build a strong America, even as they will be a bulwark against the infiltration of those life concepts that contradict our American purposes and our ideals.

Mothers of service men and women, as represented by the Blue Star Mothers of America, should have this Federal recognition, so taking their rightful place beside such groups as the various service organizations that have been granted Federal charters.

I hope the bill will have early and favorable consideration, both in the Committee on the Judiciary and in the House.

GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR IS BREAKING THE GIANT COMBINES OF JAPAN

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to represent the city of Little Rock, in which one of the great military leaders of modern times was born, just 69 years ago yesterday. Gen. Douglas MacArthur has spent little time in his native State, but we in Arkansas like to think that one characteristic which he has demonstrated in his direction of the affairs of Japan is associated with his knowledge of economic problems of the South and the West.

It was the feeling of the agricultural sections of this country that their relationship to the industrial power of the Nation, sometimes referred to as a colonial status, led to the passage of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and later to the Clayton Act, in an effort to break the hold which the big combines and the giant industries had fixed upon large segments of the Nation.

Japan, too, in the years before the war, had similar combines—in fact, a very large percentage of the industrial wealth of Japan was tightly held by only a handful of managerial families. These people were known as the Zaibatsu, or money clique.

One of the large problems in the reorganization of the Japanese economy at the end of the war has been to decentralize these combines so that the wealth which they produced might be more generally held and the people of Japan as a whole might cease to suffer from the monopolistic practices.

General MacArthur has been actively favoring this policy of reorganization of Zaibatsu power, and his efforts in that direction are appreciated by the citizens of the area which is proud to claim him as a native son.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

THE GERMAN PEOPLE

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor to call to the attention of the House another of those decisions of the German-staffed denazification courts which are causing more and more concern to American citizens who can recall the unhappy lassitude with which the world listened to the soft peace whines of the Germans following the First World War.

I refer today to the action of a German denazification court which set aside an earlier conviction of Count Franz von Papen and reduced his fine. A light touch to this aging and ailing man was the prohibition against participation in politics. Von Papen has been one of the most valuable men in Germany for 40 years, and he has never been openly in politics. He has been the master international fixer, the sly gray fox of Vaterland diplomacy.

Example could be piled on example. Fritz Thyssen and Hjalmar Schacht are among the most glaring examples.

More recently Walter Gieseking suddenly appeared on the horizon as a cleansed and purified artist, purged of his Naziphile record and perfumed for the delectation of music lovers.

Gieseking is admittedly one of the world's greatest living pianists, and I regret that I was forced by my convictions and my conscience to take the lead in forcing his expulsion from the country as an undesirable after the State Department had granted him a visitor's visa. As Dr. Hans Kindler expressed it, we have to draw the line somewhere; and in the flood of visiting pro-Nazi artists, musicians, journalists, scientists, lawyers, and what not, I chose to draw the line at Walter Gieseking, not only because I believe that he himself is a danger to the security of this country, but to dramatize the flow of whitewashed Nazi crows who are entering while the victims of Hitlerism are still confined to DP camps.

However, the most terrifying thing about this situation, both as to visiting Nazis and to those who stay in Germany, is the clue given as to the attitude of the German people and, perhaps, of our own Americans in Germany.

I do not wish to cast any intemperate reflections at the gallant Americans, military and civilian alike, who are manning our own farflung bastions of security in middle Europe, yet it cannot escape my mind that the denazification courts would not be so lenient to flagrant guilt if it were not well understood that the Americans are not mad at the Germans any more.

For almost 2,000 years the German people have been a constant threat to civilization.

Mr. Speaker, we must not let ourselves be lulled into forgetfulness of the death and horror and misery they have brought to Europe and America over the centuries. Let us not permit the German dream of empire to be brought to new and bloody reality.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MULTER (at the request of Mr. HOLIFIELD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RODINO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in each printed items.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the Philadelphia Inquirer in reference to my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], who for 16 years has been one of the most distinguished Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Dr. Philip C. Jessup, United States representative of the Security Council in Paris.

Mr. GRANAHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by John M. Cummings, appearing in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include in each an editorial.

Mr. EVINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by a former Member of Congress.

INSTITUTE FOR RHEUMATISM AND ARTHRITIS RESEARCH

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill that would authorize the establishment in the United States Public Health Service of an Institute on Rheumatism and Arthritis. This bill follows in general, Mr. Speaker, the same type of research study that has been authorized in the mental health bill, cancer, tuberculosis, and heart bills.

I am happy to say that I have been joined in this effort by the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS]. I hope that we can, with this approach, get some legislation passed soon that will be helpful in research in this field.

RHEUMATISM AND ARTHRITIS RESEARCH

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Tennessee has said, we have introduced today a bil. to set up an institute within the Public Health Service to look into the research, the cause, and the cure of arthritis and rheumatism. Statistics show that arthritis and rheumatism are the greatest cripplers of all the diseases. There are 7,000,000 people who are now suffering from rheumatism and arthritis within the United States. One hundred and forty-seven thousand people today are immobilized in bed by reason of arthritis. It is not a spectacular disease. It does not attract the headlines. At the same time it is a very cruel and merciless disease, confining many people to lifetime of imprisonment, suffering, and torture. I say this not from any statistics, but from the personal experience of a member of my own family. Twenty-five years ago this man weighed 175 pounds and was a fine physical specimen. Today he weighs 108 pounds and his body is as rigid as a rail, completely ossified. It was a sad and tragic sight to watch this dread disease creep from his knees into his hips, up his spine, into his neck and shoulders, leaving them completely cemented. Today, arthritis is sealing his jaws and closing his eyelids—it does not kill, but it might be more humane if it did. He has been to every clinic and sanatorium of repute in the Western Hemisphere, and it is sad to report that no one knows anything about arthritis. Certainly a Government that gives millions to develop land and electricity and roads—a Government which gave $11,000,000 to make paths through forests last year—can and should get behind a movement to find out the cause and cure of arthritis, the Nation's great crippler.

ADJOURNMENT OVER AND PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please tell us the program for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be glad to. At the present time there is no specific program for next week. If, however, any bills are reported out of committee—and I cannot see any that will have to have the attention of the House on Monday, Tuesday, or probably Wednesday—and in order to have sufficient flexibility so that the House will feel I am keeping faith with them—I will give the House 24 hours' notice; for example, the reorganization bill. I do not know whether or not that bill or any other bill will come out of committee next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We will have 24 hours' notice?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will give the House 24 hours' notice. With that flexibility, I have no program to announce for next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL ARTHRITIS AND RHEUMATIC RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the No. 1 crippler of our people is arthritis and rheumatic diseases. Strange as it may seem, basic research in this field has been exceedingly limited.

Seven million Americans are suffering from some type of arthritis or other forms of rheumatic disease. One hundred forty-seven thousand are completely disabled. Over 800,000 are partially disabled, and more than 6,000,000 others are subject to chronic or recurrent disability and pain. It is time that the resources of the Nation were mobilized to fight this destructive crippler of mankind.

Following the pattern set by the Congress in the National Mental Health Act, the Cancer Act, and the Heart Act, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS], the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS], and the gentleman from Wisconsin who is now speaking have today filed identical bills proposing to establish a National Arthritis and Rheumatic Research Institute as a part of the Public Health Service. I sincerely hope that this legislation will receive an early hearing, and I am convinced that it will pass the Congress by unanimous consent and thus set in motion a program that will develop the scientific and medical resources of this Nation and the world in an effort to find the cause and a cure for this No. 1 crippler of our people. It is purely a bipartisan effort, conceived in the interest of the American people. I trust that every Member of Congress will become familiar with the provisions of this act and give it the same unanimous support that has been accorded similar legislation in the fields heretofore referred to.

OUR FATS AND OILS PROBLEM CAN BE AND MUST BE SOLVED

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of the House a matter that affects every section of the United States and gives you an illustration of how delegations of powers to the departments of government can be misused either through ignorance or deliberate intent.

Congress was asked to give the different departments of government the power to control and allocate exports of various products. Among these products are fats and oils, produced from farm products in the United States. The importance of our fats and oils cannot be overestimated in thinking of national prosperity.

Mr. Carl H. Wilken, economic analyst of the Raw Materials National Council, through his studies of our national economy has revealed the fact that each $1 of gross farm production generates $7 of national income. Our production of fats and oils—butter, cottonseed oil, linseed oil, corn oil, soybean oil, peanut oil, tung oil, lard, tallow, and greases—approximates 10,000,000,000 pounds per year. Our annual production of fats and oils therefore is very important in our national economy. For each 10 cents per pound there is involved $1,000,000,000 of gross farm income and $7,000,000,000 of national income.

Fats and oils are the concentrated food product from much of our farm production. A pound of fat contains 4,080 calories as compared to 1,260 calories in a pound of lean meat. It is the most highly concentrated form of food to create human energy.

Using the control which we, the Congress, as a body gave them, the various departments have permitted the imports of fats and oils from world supplies. At the same time they have curtailed the allocations for exports to the extent that supplies have accumulated in the United States and have depressed the price. All told our imports were approximately 470,000,000 pounds greater than the exports which they permitted, even though we have this great surplus of fats and oils.

As a result of these indirect OPA tactics the price of lard in the past 12 months has dropped from 28 cents per pound to 14.5 cents. Other fats and oils have dropped in proportion. The packer knows when he buys hogs, cattle, and sheep that he will take a loss of at least 12 cents per pound on the lard and tallow, so to make up this loss he must charge several cents more per pound for the meat.

The effect can be easily estimated for different sections of the Nation. For example, the estimated cottonseed oil production from the 1948 cotton crop will approximate 1,650,000,000 pounds. Because of the price reduction of approximately 15 cents per pound the farmers of the South will lose approximately $250,000,000 if we permit this control to continue.

In the case of tallow, a part of a fat corn-fed steer, the price has been forced down to a price below that established under the days of the old OPA. In fact the price of all these fats and oils are rapidly reaching OPA levels.

As Members of Congress we should all realize that, if we are to meet the President's budget request of approximately $45,000,000,000, we must maintain a high national income. What right have we as a body to permit the different departments of Government to destroy the very income we need and destroy our primary income from agriculture.

In my opinion there is no excuse for this situation. Europe is being rationed at the rate of 1 pound of edible fat per month, or about one-fourth of our domestic consumption. Fats are the cheapest form of calories and the most vital for building up human energy. Yet here we find ourselves deliberately buying up world supplies, and refusing to permit Europe to have the necessary fats for a good diet because some bureaucrat is misusing powers which we have voted. Here is one place where the reciprocal trade treaty is beginning to hurt and hurt badly.

Under the circumstances I feel that the Congress should notify these departments to make increased allocations at once and that when legislation to renew these powers comes before this body we refuse to extend this control over the exports of fats and oils and misuse of authority. Congress in granting these powers did not intend that it should be used as price control.

In order that you may rest assured that various groups called this matter to the attention of those in control, I would like to insert in the RECORD as a part of my statement an analysis made by our friend Carl H. Wilken for the Western States Meat Packers Association, Inc. This analysis was presented to the Fats and Oils Branch of the Production Marketing Division on August 30, 1948. Therefore the blame rests directly upon the departments in charge. It looks as if it requires direct action by this body to remove this world monopoly over fats and oils which we have permitted through legislation.

If we wish to have meat production in the United States then we must prevent the penalty of low prices for fats and oils which curtails the feeding of livestock.

Our farmers and leading farm organizations are greatly concerned about this matter and they are insisting that it be corrected, and rightly so. Here is a letter from Mr. Howard Hill, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau, which I will also read to the House:

IOWA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Des Moines, Iowa, January 21, 1949.

Hon. BEN F. JENSEN,
House Office Building,

DEAR BEN: The farmers of Iowa are very much concerned over the decline in lard prices, which, as you know, is being reflected in the price of live hogs. Current prices have dropped as low as 13 cents a pound. The reason for this decline in the price of lard is, of course, the supply. The supplies of lard in cold storage January 1 were 112,000,000 pounds as compared with a 5-year average of 105,000,000 pounds on that date.

One of the reasons for the increase in supply is the lower export allocations. The allocations made thus far for the January–March quota amount to 72,000,000 pounds. In the same quarter a year ago, exports were 96,000,000 pounds. Revised United States Department of Agriculture estimates indicate that we will produce 683,000,000 pounds for this current quarter.

The members of the Iowa Farm Bureau board of directors have asked me to write and seek your support for additional allocations for the European relief program. Recommendations concerning ERP shipments are made by the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Commerce. It is our understanding that the Department of Agriculture has recommended higher export allocations, but as yet these recommendations have not been approved by the Department of Commerce.

At the present price, lard is a very cheap source of food. We feel that it is one of the best commodities the Europeans could purchase since they have a need for animal fats, and at this price I know of no commodity they could purchase to secure more food value for their money.

The per capita consumption of meat went down from 155.2 pounds in 1947 to 145.2 pounds in 1948. In the case of pork (including lard) the per capita consumption went down from 70.0 pounds in 1947 to 66.8 pounds in 1948. In 1939–41 average consumption of pork was 67.7 pounds per capita. The people want more meat and an increase in the exports of lard would encourage the production of hogs, which in turn would help relieve the grain situation when we run into a surplus grain problem.

I am calling this to your attention because we feel that the Department of Commerce may need some urging and because we feel that this is an opportunity to benefit both the recipients of the European relief shipments and the Midwest farmer.

If we can be of service at any time, please feel free to call on us.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

E. HOWARD HILL,
President.

ANALYSIS OF LIVESTOCK SITUATION, FATS AND OILS PRICES—PRODUCTION AND POTENTIAL GRAIN SUPPLIES

(By Carl H. Wilken, economic analyst)

Mr. E. F. FORBES,
President, Western States Meat Packers Association, Inc., San Francisco, Calif.:

In making an analysis of the livestock situation and the relationship of fats and oils to the industry involves many factors not only from the standpoint of production of meats but also the attitude of national economic policies that affect the industry in many ways.

The present situation of fats and oils in the general price structure presents a distorted picture when compared with the long range of price relationship between meat products and fats and oils. This distortion, in my opinion, is entirely the result of governmental controls over the exports and imports of fats and oils and the failure of those in charge to analyze all the factors that enter into a realistic allocation of fats and oils for export.

RATIONING OF FATS AND OILS

Legislation which gives the different departments of Government the power to control exports of fats and oils indirectly carries with it the power to ration supplies to other nations. Failure to make proper allocations of lard, tallow, and other greases for exports can very easily increase the domestic supply sufficiently to reduce the price far below the normal price structure.

Too low a price for the fats and oils in turn affects all branches of the livestock industry, from the farm to the consumer.

For example, in August 1947, fats and oils reached a relatively low price as compared to the live cost of cattle and hogs. As a result the packer in buying heavy or lard hogs reduced the price to the farmer as much as $8 per hundredweight. The farmer in turn having taken a loss on his hogs because of their weight curtailed his productive efforts with the result that hog numbers January 1, 1948, were back to 1939 levels.

Even though the packer was able to protect himself to some extent by lower bids for heavy hogs, he was forced to pass on some of the loss on lard and tallow to the wholesaler and retailer of meat.

This branch of the industry in turn being confronted with losses on the sale of fats and oils trimmed from the carcass, were forced to pass it on to the consumer in a higher price for choice cuts such as pork chops and hams. It is interesting to note that in the period from May 1947 through August 1947, as the price of lard in the Washington retail market dropped 10 cents per pound, the price of pork chops increased 10 cents per pound This relationship was recognized by the OPA in their ceilings on meat products. During the era of price control the price of pork chops was approximately double the price of lard.

NO ONE GAINED

No one benefited particularly from the rationing of fats and oils by the departments, with the possible exception of the soap industry, which found it possible to buy relatively cheap fats for their soap products. Because of the buying power of the public the packer and retailer in most cases were able to pass on the loss on fats and oils to the consumer of meats. As a direct result the consumer has been forced to pay from 10 to 15 cents per pound more for steak, pork chops, hams, etc., than would normally be necessary. The packer, farmer, and retailer all were blamed for the high meat prices when in fact most of the blame should be placed directly on the unsound policies followed in making the proper allocations to maintain the price balance.

These departments will very likely state that they are not interested in the price, but by preventing exports and allocations they have controlled supply and indirectly the price, regardless of whether they intended to do so or not.

FUTURE SUPPLIES

In addition to the factors I have mentioned, excessive purchases of grains at critical periods in the market last year sent grain prices sky-rocketing. Widespread publicity of the shortage of grain and high price resulted in the liquidation of millions of head of livestock. Numbers of cattle and hogs as of January 1, 1948, indicate that meat production for 1949 will drop back to approximately 19,000,000,000 pounds. This drop of over 4,000,000,000 pounds, from the production of 1945, 1946, and 1947 is a drop of approximately 18 percent. The drop in production will in turn reduce the per capita consumption to approximately 130 pounds as compared to 155 pounds in 1947.

Unless the departments adopt a realistic attitude towards fats and oils prices, permitting them to rise to a level which will induce the farmer to feed to heavier weights, we will have future shortages of both fats and oils and meat products.

To illustrate, if a program were initiated to induce the farmer to add 50 pounds to the weight of each hog marketed, the 40,000,000 spring pigs available for market in 1948 and the early part of 1949, we could increase our meat production—live weight—2,000,000,000 pounds. In the process of producing the additional weight we would have an increase in both meats and fats and oils. But, after the experience of the last few years, the farmer is not likely to feed for additional weight if the present dislocation in fats and oils prices as compared to meat continues.

FEED SUPPLIES

Present crop estimates indicate the largest supply of feed grains in history, and the Nation could have the additional meat and fats by bringing the livestock and grains available together, the former as the factory and the latter as the raw material.

Unless such a program is brought into being, meat supplies will remain in short supply for several years. In fact, our expansion in livestock production has not kept pace with the increase in population since 1920.

In 1920 we had a population of 105,000,000 with a cattle population of 70,400,000, hog population of 60,159,000, and a sheep population of 40,743,000.

At the present time we have a population of approximately 145,000,000 with a cattle population of 78,000,000, a hog population of 55,000,000, and a sheep population of 38,571,000.

1948 MEAT PRODUCTION

It should be remembered that some of the 1947 and 1948 meat production was the result of liquidation of livestock numbers, With the large crop of feed grains and lower grain prices the tendency of the producer will be to replace some of the liquidation of livestock. In bringing this about breeding stock held back for expansion will reduce the marketable animals for 1949, thus decreasing meat production to that extent.

PRICE RELATIONSHIPS

In analyzing price relationships of fats and oils, hides, and meat products to live costs, it should be borne in mind that the producer cannot segregate these items and in the feeding process must produce all of them. The attitude of the departments toward the fats and oils situation indicates that they look upon fats, hides, etc., as byproducts and seem to forget that when a steer is purchased at $40 per hundredweight that this also represents the cost per pound of tallow and hides. Any reduction that the packer or distributor must take below the live cost has to be added on to some other part of the carcass in order for it to pay out.

As a result of this fact the price of lard, tallow, and hides to break even should be somewhat higher than the average live cost. To illustrate, you will note the tabulation below as to the average live cost of cattle, the price of hides, and the price of tallow. In the case of tallow, the price in the period 1925–29 which I have used was somewhat lower than the live cost of all beef steers. The low tallow price was the result of competition from two factors, first, the imports of coconut oil and, second, the fats or greases rendered from many sources.

| | Average price of all steers at Chicago | Price of hides at Chicago, heavy native | Wholesale price of tallow at Chicago |
|---|---|---|---|
| | Per hundredweight | Cents per pound | Cents per pound |
| 1925 | $10.16 | 15.96 | 9.7 |
| 1926 | 9.47 | 14.08 | 8.7 |
| 1927 | 11.36 | 19.28 | 8.1 |
| 1928 | 13.91 | 23.85 | 8.8 |
| 1929 | 13.43 | 16.98 | 8.5 |
| Average | 11.66 | 18.03 | 8.7 |

Using the 1925–29 prices as an index of 100, a comparison with live cost for 1947 of $25.83 per hundredweight for all beef steers, the increase was 121 percent. On this basis the average price of tallow in 1947 should have been 221 percent of the 1925–29 average or 19.2 cents per pound. It happens that this checks exactly with the average price in 1947 as given in the Fats and Oils Situation (BAE) for January–April 1948.

Applying the same index to hides, the average price of heavy hides at Chicago in 1947 should have been approximately 40 cents per pound.

The average price of cattle in the week ended August 21 at Chicago was $34.78 per hundredweight. This is approximately an increase of 200 percent from 1925–29 averages. At this price level, tallow should sell for 26.1 cents per pound and hides at 54 cents per pound.

The current price for prime inedible tallow is approximately 13.5 cents per pound and heavy hides 29 cents per pound. The loss on these two items, as compared to present live costs, is approximately $22 on a beef which has a live weight of approximately 950 pounds and a beef carcass of 500 pounds.

Marketing specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture estimate the suet, cod, and shop fat at 10 percent of carcass weight. Deducting this from the carcass weight of 500 pounds, it leaves 450 pounds of meat. Deducting from this an estimated shrink and waste of 10 percent, the 500-pound carcass has 400 pounds of salable meat.

To absorb the loss of $22 from too low a comparative price on hides and tallow, the mark-up on the salable meat must be approximately 5.5 cents per pound. A choice beef carcass will yield roughly 25 percent of steak or 125 pounds. If the loss is recovered from a mark-up in the price of steak it would require an additional charge of 17.6 cents per pound.

In newspaper accounts of high meat prices steak is usually used as an illustration. The news items, however, do not point out that rationing of fats and oils and relatively low prices for fats and hides, as compared to live costs are responsible and that the packer or the retail butcher is being unjustly criticized for highjacking the public.

HOG PRICES

A similar condition exists in the relative price of lard, live costs of hogs, and retail prices. The tabulation below gives average hog prices and lard prices in the period 1925–29.

| | Average hog prices at Chicago | Average lard prices at Chicago [1] |
|---|---|---|
| | Per Cwt. | Cts. per lb. |
| 1925 | $11.81 | 17.9 |
| 1926 | 12.34 | 16.9 |
| 1927 | 9.95 | 13.7 |
| 1928 | 9.22 | 13.3 |
| 1929 | 10.16 | 12.9 |
| Average | 10.70 | 14.9 |

[1] Refined lard, wholesale.

In 1947 the average price of hogs at Chicago was $24.45. This represented an increase from the 1925–29 average of 129 percent. The price of lard to maintain the relative price to live costs in 1925–29 should have been 34.1 cents per pound.

The average price during the year 1947 was 25.6 cents per pound. Live costs at Chicago the week ending August 21, 1948, averaged $27.48 per hundredweight or 156 percent above the average of 1925–29. Current prices for refined lard should be 38.1 cents per pound. The current price is approximately 18 cents. In other words, the packer, wholesaler, and retailer must absorb a loss of 18 cents per pound on lard at present market levels.

Lard production (average 1942–46) is approximately 20 percent of total pork production. On this basis a good butcher weighing 250 pounds and dressing 178 pounds would yield 35.6 pounds of lard.

With the present price relationship between live costs and lard, the packer loss on lard is approximately 20 cents per pound or $7.12 for each 250-pound hog. This loss is passed on to the consumer in the sale of the dressed carcass weighing approximately 150 pounds after deducting the lard. The loss of $7.12 spread over the total salable meat is approximately 5 cents per pound if allowance is made for cutting shrinkage.
